State Commission Approves Inspection Napanoch Institute

Albany, July 20—The State Commission of Correction has approved the following report of inspection of the Institution for Male Defective Delinquents at Napanoch:

Inspected June 1-3, 1933. John L. Hoffman, acting superintendent.

The construction of the Institution for Male Defective Delinquents was authorized by the Legislature in 1892 as the Eastern New York Reformatory and was first occupied as such in 1900. In 1921 its use as a reformatory was discontinued and it was designated as an institution for the detention of male defective delinquents.

The advantage of segregating this type of offender from those in the other institutions was apparent from the beginning and because of increasing population it was planned to enlarge the capacity of the institution to 1,000. This plan has been abandoned. The present capacity is 788 and there is being constructed at Woodburne, in Sullivan county a few miles away, a new institution which will be a branch of the one at Napanoch.

Meanwhile, improvements are going ahead at Napanoch. An appropriation of $42,000 is available for alterations to the Administration Building, the construction of a cannery, and the installation of heating, sanitary and electric service connections. The changes in the Administration Building contemplate the removal of the officers on the first floor to the second. When completed the Superintendent's office, the office of his secretary, telephone exchange, key room and armory, reception room and guard room will be on the first floor. The second floor will contain the offices of the chief clerk, storekeeper, the record office and those of other members of the staff; and the officers' recreation room and officers' mess and kitchen will be on the third. Although an appropriation has been made for a cannery, no provision has been made for its equipment.

The funds previously appropriated for new roofs have been re-appropriated.

The new armory and gymnasium building is well under way and it is expected it will be occupied this year.

Work on the new pipe lines and other improvements to the water supply are progressing. The water, in a large measure, will come from artesian wells supplementing the reservoirs on the mountain in the rear of the institution.

The interior of No. 2 Housing Building has been repainted.

In a previous report of inspection the following statement was made:

"The windows and frames in both the north and south cell halls are of the ordinary type of sliding sash in wooden frames; they are in such condition that in severe weather they are frequently blown out. They can be operated only by using ladders and men have been injured by falls when attempting to operate them. Modern steel sash with ventilating sections should be installed. Estimated cost $15,000."

No appropriation has yet been made for this very necessary improvement.

Each prisoner received is given a thorough physical examination; also psychiatric, psychometric, dental and optical examinations are given, and the social worker obtains information from available sources. All records and correspondence relating to the prisoner are permanently bound and filed as case records.

The hospital is a comparatively new fireproof building and is well equipped. There is a physician, assistant physician, psychiatrist, and a visiting optician; also two visiting dentists. Visits are made every two weeks; the dentists are paid twelve dollars per visit. The state pays for extractions and minor fillings. Any additional dental work is paid for by the inmate directly to the dentists. This arrangement is very unsatisfactory; a full-time dentist is needed and should be employed; an appropriation by the legislature will be necessary.

Religious services are held every Sunday in the chapel, both Catholic and Protestant. Jewish services are held at irregular intervals.

The inmates are in the yard for recreation after 4 p. m. and on Sundays and holidays. The principal games are baseball, basket ball, hand ball and boxing; the boxing is carefully supervised. There are moving pictures in the auditorium and smoking is permitted at certain times in the prisoners' cells and rooms. The installation of a radio with central control would be of value in administration. Many of the institutions in the Department have this equipment and it has been found to have a most beneficial effect upon the inmate population.

One of the non-uniformed staff acts as a counsellor to inmates while they are in the recreation rooms in No. 2 Building from 6 to 8 p. m. He makes suggestions to them and assists in the writing of letters, etc. This plan is working well. The state does not provide sufficient funds for necessary equipment to be used in connection with recreational activities. Recreation in the penal institutions is now a settled state policy and such being the case, the legislature should see that necessary funds are provided. This institution has no commissary (which is in accordance with the policy of the State Commission of Correction), so no funds are available from such source as is the case in some other institutions.

The officers' mess, which was not in satisfactory condition, has been improved; as heretofore stated, a

Hull Striving To Preserve Tariff Truce

London, July 20 (AP)—Secretary of State Cordell Hull was described in high American circles today as making a vigorous fight behind the scenes of the world economic conference to preserve the general principles of President Roosevelt's truce on tariff changes.

Strong opposition was said to have been encountered in British and European gold standard countries, and American adherence is expected to be continued only with reservations allowing for such advances in tariff schedules as may be necessary under the recovery and farm acts.

Hull, chief of the American delegation, is determined, however, that the truce idea shall not be permitted to be discarded. After being advanced by the American administration, the armistice was made effective at the beginning of the conference July 12 and was to be extended through the period of the parley.

Conference leaders were said authoritatively to have determined to form a permanent body to keep the conference alive in London during the recess which begins July 27.

This body, it was understood, will be a small steering committee composed of Prime Minister MacDonald of Great Britain, conference chairman; James M. Cox of Ohio, and Premier Hendryk Colijn of Holland, as well as other officials of the principal commissions.

The plan is to have the ambassadors at London represent those delegates on the committee who go home.

Milk Price Receives Increase in Cities

Albany, N. Y., July 20 (AP).—Retail milk prices in New York city, Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse and Albany will be increased one cent a quart tomorrow, the State Milk Control Board announced last night.

The board's order, issued in response to a demand of milk producers for higher prices to offset increased feed costs, will boost returns to dairy farmers 35 cents a hundred pounds for one class of milk. Prices for other classes vary.

The new minimum price for bottled milk delivered to homes in New York city will be 12 cents a quart and in the upstate cities the minimum price will be raised to 11 cents a quart. Store prices will be 11 cents in the metropolitan area and 10 cents upstate.

The board was to decide today in what other cities these prices should be made effective.

Both milk producers and dealers will share in the increase to be paid by the consumer. While the producer gets 35 cents a hundred pounds more than he is receiving at present, the dealer will get 12 cents more. These increases apply only to milk re-sold by dealers for immediate consumption.

Tennessee Voting on Repeal Amendment

Nashville, Tenn., July 20 (AP).—Tennessee voted its verdict on prohibition today. It was the nineteenth state to declare its will on the proposed prohibition repeal amendment to the federal constitution. The other 18 have voted for repeal.

From repeal headquarters came a statement predicting the action two days ago of Tennessee's sister states, Alabama and Arkansas, the first of the traditionally dry deep south to vote against prohibition, would exert a "tremendous influence" for repeal in Tennessee.

The anti-prohibition statement added there was no chance to "stave off repeal in 1933" and forecast a majority in this state for it of at least 50,000.

The Rev. John F. Baggett, dry campaign chairman, declared "What transpired in Arkansas and Alabama will in no wise affect the results in Tennessee." He added he believed the state would become the first to reject repeal, with a 75,000 vote margin of victory.

VICTIM OF SHOOTING ACCIDENT IN HOSPITAL

Alfred T. Rotgard, 15, of 1472 Montgomery avenue, Bronx, was taken to the Kingston Hospital Wednesday, where he was given treatment by Dr. F. A. Johnston for a bullet hole through the arm above the elbow.

Rotgard and a companion, Richard V. Colligan of 2670 Valentine avenue, New York city, who are spending a vacation at Rifton, were shooting at a can with a .22 calibre rifle. Colligan was loading the rifle, when it went off unexpectedly, striking Rotgard, who stood in front of him.

The injury was not considered serious.

Miss Nance to Broadcast.

Miss Evelyn Nance, Ulster County Home Bureau Manager, is to give another broadcast from WGY, Schenectady, Friday. Her subject is "Fruit Juices," and is the third of a series of talks arranged by WGY for the summer season. These programs are known as the WGY Canning Clinics of the Air. Oneida county furnishes the speaker next Friday for the canning clinic who will discuss the canning of greens.

Roosevelt Keeping Eye on Exchange As Prices Take Big Drop

Will Take Action If His Recovery Plans Are Endangered—Senator Thomas Sends Telegram to Presidents of Exchanges, Pointing Out Yesterday's Big Slumps.

Washington, July 20 (AP)—President Roosevelt is watching silently and closely the ups and downs of the security and commodity exchanges. If his recovery plans are endangered, his supporters believe he will not hesitate to take any necessary, and feasible, action.

But there had been no indication from him today whether he thought exchange prices were high or low enough, or whether yesterday's big slumps should be considered particularly bothersome.

Consequently, there was much talk about how closely, if at all, the telegram Senator Thomas (D-Okla.) sent last night to the presidents of the New York stock and the Chicago grain exchanges might represent Mr. Roosevelt's attitude.

Thomas said he had not talked with the President about the messages, which warned that "unless a rule is adopted and published establishing a reasonable amount of depreciation in any one session, a campaign for reform will immediately take shape with possible results either closing exchange entirely or placing same under government supervision."

The Oklahoman added that yesterday's activity "demonstrates the absolute necessity for immediate adoption of rules" limiting the loss in any one day.

It was recalled that Thomas long had been an outright inflationist. Likewise it was remarked that he drafted the inflation rider approved by President Roosevelt and attached to the farm mortgage bill at the last session of congress. The broad powers in that measure, however, have not been used to obtain direct inflation.

Instead, President Roosevelt and his advisers are concentrating on their recovery campaign designed to bring higher wages and prices simultaneously by agreements between industry, labor and the government.

Frequently, when asked about rises in the stock and commodity markets, officials have said what might be interpreted as a favorable indicator but that too much emphasis should not be put upon it.

Secretary Wallace already has begun his wheat reduction-price-raising plan. He said flatly that the jump in price to more than $1 a bushel did not mean his program would be dropped for the next year.

Favors Federal Regulation.

The President does want federal regulation of the exchanges. In a message to the last session of congress asking the securities law, he parenthesized:

"It (the securities bill) should be followed by legislation relating to the better supervision of the purchase and sale of all property dealt in on exchanges."

A specific bill to that end was not presented because of a number of things. First, the special session's calendar already was crowded; second, Wall Street directly asked the President for time to put its own house in order.

There is, though, a federal law in force which could restrict the amount of money loaned for speculation if the President decided to much was being used that way. The Glass-Steagall bank reform bill permits the Federal Reserve board to order and enforce such restrictions.

Likewise, President Roosevelt has given his endorsement to continuation of the senate banking committee's stock market investigation. The committee is in recess now, but has representatives in New York looking over the records of private banking houses. Chairman Fletcher said that if it became necessary, the committee would study the "Roosevelt boom market."

Should the fluctuations become too marked, Fletcher has the right to call the committee back into session this summer.

5 AMERICAN PRISONERS ARE ORDERED RELEASED.

Palma, Mallorca, July 20 (AP).—Five American prisoners held here without bail for a month and a half because they allegedly attacked a civil guard, were granted bail today and were ordered released.

Manuel Azana, premier and war minister of Spain, cabled the military authorities here ordering the immediate release of the Americans. He took this action after a lengthy conference with United States Ambassador Claude G. Bowers in Madrid.

It was learned that following his conversation with the premier, Mr. Bowers immediately visited Foreign Minister De Los Rios in the capital.

Dies on Visit to Denver.

Albany, N. Y., July 20 (AP)—Benjamin P. Wheat, 62, Albany lawyer, died last night in Denver, Col., his wife has been notified. Wheat left Albany 10 days ago for a tour of Yellowstone Park and a visit to mining properties at Caspar, Wyo., and to call upon his sister in Denver, Mrs. Clarence B. Fox. He died at her home. Mr. Wheat was born at Sedalia, Mo., September 21, 1871, obtained a Ph.B. at Columbia in 1904. He married May E. Baker at Mount Vernon, Ia., June 16, 1895. They had three daughters.

President Hopes To Attend Dedication Of Tablet at Church

President Roosevelt May Be Present At Dedication of Tablet At First Dutch Church in Memory of Washington's Visit.

On Sunday, the 30th of July, at three o'clock in the afternoon, that being the 156th anniversary of the inauguration of George Clinton, the first governor of the state of New York, who was inaugurated here on that day, a tablet affixed to the pediment at the north of the main entrance to the First Dutch Church commemorative of the visit of George Washington to Kingston and the church, in 1782, will be dedicated with simple and becoming ceremonies.

The tablet is of bronze, 56 inches in the perpendicular and 49 inches horizontally. It was designed by Maxfield Keck the celebrated sculptor architect, and cast by the Gorham Company of New York.

Invitations to attend the dedication have been extended by the dominie and consistory of the First Dutch to the rectors, ministers, pastors, officers and members of the congregations of all the religious institutions of Kingston, regardless of denominational divergency, thus following the ancient custom of the First Dutch to place its house of worship at the disposal of all religious bodies.

The ceremony has been fixed for 3 o'clock in the afternoon in order to avoid conflicting with the morning service and afternoon meeting of the other churches and their Sunday Schools. There will not be any parade, brass bands, or banquet. The ceremony will be austere and in keeping with the solemnity of the day and dignity of the occasion.

President Roosevelt has expressed his intention of being present peradventure his health and multiplicity of engagements will permit his attendance. He is of the opinion that as the first President of the United States was a guest of the First Dutch and his ancestors attended service at the church immediately upon their arrival from Holland, and as George Clinton, the first governor was inaugurated at Kingston, it will be eminently fitting that he should be here.

POLICE RIDE THROUGH SWARMS OF DEXDALE STRIKERS

Lansdale, Pa., July 20 (AP).—Police rode their horses through swarms of strikers outside the Dexdale Hosiery Mill today and were stoned in retaliation.

The disorder broke out as non-striking employes sought to drive their automobiles into the grounds. Scores of pickets blocked the driveways and, riot sticks swinging freely, a handful of police rode into the crowds.

Police Chief Rodney Shaver of Jenkintown, in charge of 40 police deputized by the sheriff, was struck in the back with a rock and a girl employe was cut as another stone shattered a window in her automobile. Shaver was severely bruised by a missile yesterday.

Several pickets were arrested. One of them was a girl.

Mill officials said about 300 employes reported for work today, including a score of knitters on whom the strike depended for much of its effectiveness.

FAIR FAIR TALENT MUST WEAR A LITTLE CLOTHING

Chicago, July 20 (AP).—Loin cloths promised to become popular at the World's Fair today following an order by the management that women entertainers must don a few clothes of one kind or another.

The order, coming on the heels of the "curfew" closing hour of concessions, and threatening cancellation of contracts of violators brought additional protests from operators of night clubs on the grounds.

"These fair officials are trying to put fun and pleasure on a business schedule and it can't be done," said Texas Guinan.

"Tex" said her crowds don't get interesting until just before the sun rises.

"WILLOW TREE" WILL OPEN ON FRIDAY NIGHT

"The Willow Tree," the latest gesture of the Maverick Players in Woodstock to offer something entirely different in dramatic art, has now been postponed. It will open Friday night this week instead of tonight, as scheduled.

This Japanese fantasy by Benrimo and Harrison Rhodes will be presented in the open air theatre, and partly because of this, coupled with the difficult sets, wardrobes and lighting effects, the producers of the play found it impossible to whip the production into shape before Friday.

30 Days For Petit Larceny.

Raymond Purdy, 47, of Woodstock, was found guilty of petit larceny when arraigned before Justice Wallace Shultis Wednesday and was committed to the Ulster county jail for 30 days.

Treasury Receipts.

Washington, July 20 (AP).—Treasury receipts for July 18 were $14,159,814.84; expenditures, $4,941,818.21; balance, $857,245,255.22. Customs duties for 18 days of July were $12,813,732.25.

Jersey City Man Shot In Leg Running From Stolen Car

Joseph Foley of Jersey City was shot in the leg this afternoon shortly after 2 o'clock on TenBroeck avenue by Officer Soper, who attempted to place Foley under arrest on a charge of grand larceny. It was reported at police headquarters that the Jersey City man was in the automobile of Arthur Herman of this city, reported stolen to police earlier in the day.

The maroon Chevrolet coach bearing license number 7B 6343 was reported stolen from the corner of O'Neil street and Broadway shortly after 2 o'clock and the police began a search for the car immediately.

When Policeman Soper approached the stolen car, he ordered the driver to halt, but instead the man at the wheel left the car in gear and jumped. The car hit a tree and was slightly damaged. In the car was a girl, who is also being detained by the police. Another man alighted from the car and started to run and the officer began shooting with the result that Foley fell to the ground and his companion, James McGirl, surrendered.

It was later learned that the girl held at police headquarters was Josephine Guziak of 381 Abeel street.

Marshall Miller of the fire department assisted Officer Soper in making the arrests.

McGirl is being questioned at police headquarters and Foley is in the Kingston oHspital, where his wounds are not expected to prove serious.

Miss Guziak said she met the two men last night, when they said they would take her swimming today. They called at her home shortly after dinner.

Radio Star Brought Before Judge Culloton

Appearing in city court this morning was none less a personage than William (Bill) Osborne of radio fame. He was brought before Judge Bernard A. Culloton on a warrant sworn out by A. H. Lipgar, local photographer, who charged the radio band leader with petit larceny.

The charge grew out of business done at Max Schmeling's training camp at Greenkill Lodge last summer, involving Mr. Lipgar, Mr. Osborne and a man by the name of LaStrange. Lipgar claims he furnished Osborne with $30 worth of pictures which he never paid for. Osborne contends he did not order the pictures but that LaStrange did and that Lipgar should collect from him.

An adjournment in the case was taken until August 12, when a hearing will be held. Osborne was represented by Attorney Chris J. Flanagan. Mr. Lipgar had no counsel. He was prepared to show the pictures which he took, however, and communications between himself and Osborne.

Osborne was accompanied in court by several friends. He came here evidently from New York where he resides at the Park Central Hotel, according to the address he gave to Sergeant James V. Simpson who has the distinction of being the one who wrote the name of the musical star on the police blotter.

Garbed in light summer clothes, Osborne looked nothing like the photos of the nattily dressed youth Mr. Lipgar had in his portfolio ready to exhibit to Judge Culloton, and none knew him except those close enough to officials of the law to get a tip.

Probably on August 12, if the matter is not settled previously, there will be a crowded court room to hear all about the little difference between Messrs. Lipgar and Osborne.

Oregon Will Vote On Repeal Friday

Portland, Ore., July 20 (AP)—Oregon votes tomorrow on repeal of national and state prohibition and dry leaders seemed agreed they had no more than a "fighting chance" in the balloting.

Anti-prohibition leaders predicted a 2 to 1 vote favoring repeal.

Several prohibition leaders said privately they would consider it "a victory" if the wet majority is not greater than last November, when repeal of the state prohibition enforcing laws carried 206,619 to 128,775. The repeal of the enforcing acts left only "constitutional" prohibition on the Oregon statutes. Ineffective without enforcing measures.

Anti-prohibition leaders said their only worry was that the voters might be confused by the phraseology on the ballot. To vote against the 18th amendment a voter must mark his ticket in favor of the 21st, or repealing amendment.

Peddler Sentenced To Jail.

Lewis Hicks, 22, of Kingston, a peddler, was given ten days in the Ulster county jail Wednesday. Hicks, who is said to be out on parole, was arrested by Trooper Senecal, charged with creating a disturbance in Port Ewen. He was arraigned before Justice H. E. McKenzie.

Tide Now Turning Against Kidnapers

(By The Associated Press.)

The tide appeared to be turning against the kidnapers today.

A complete failure in an apparent attempt at kidnaping was scored against abductors in Philadelphia, because the victim—Frank A. McClatchy, 56-year-old member of a prominent real estate firm—dared to put up a fight.

McClatchy, however, was shot and seriously wounded when he was seized by two men, who tried to tie his hands behind him with a piece of rope, while they were about to step into a house they said they wished to buy. McClatchy jerked himself free and struck one of the men in the nose and kicked the other.

One of the assailants drew a pistol and fired. McClatchy was shot in the chest. A passing motorist took him to a hospital, where he was given an even chance to recover. Philadelphia police believe the assailants, who escaped on foot, originally had planned to kidnap McClatchy's wealthy brother, John H. McClatchy, for ransom.

Meanwhile police in St. Louis began rounding up suspects in the case of August Luer, well-to-do Alton, Ill., banker, recently liberated by kidnapers, while authorities of Madison county in which Alton is situated mapped plans for an anti-gangster war. William "Bad-eye" Smith, described by police as a former southern Illinois gangster, was one of three suspects seized for questioning.

High hope for the safe return of 24-year-old John J. O'Connell, kidnaped National Guard lieutenant, was held by his relatives in Albany, N. Y. They looked for his release by Friday morning. There were others, however, notably high law enforcement officials, who expressed fear for the young man's safety.

His abductors demanded ransom of $250,000.

Rochester Police Use Tear Gas on Mob

Rochester, N. Y., July 20 (AP)—A man and a woman were overcome today as police resorted to tear gas to break up an unruly mob of strikers and sympathizers at a plant of the Keller, Heumann and Thompson Company.

Meyer Friedman, 36, said by police to have been one of the leaders of the disturbance, was taken to a hospital, Mrs. Ida Rollick, standing in the yard of her home nearby, was overcome when the fumes of the gas blew towards her. She was treated by an ambulance interne.

Police had fifty men present when the crowd began to congregate and when they had trouble moving them on, threw several tear gas bombs.

There ware no arrests.

Despite a 20 per cent increase in pay and reduction in working hours to 40 a week, several hundred of the 1,200 employes in the concern's plants went out on strike when Sol Heumann, president of the company, refused to meet with the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, whom he contended did not represent the workers.

The union claims it has the right to bargain under the provisions of the national recovery act.

DISCHARGED LABORER SHOOTS TWO FOREMEN.

Dunkirk, N. Y., July 20 (AP).—A discharged track laborer today shot down two New York Central track foremen, killing one instantly and wounding the other critically.

Charles Leone, 50, was accused by police of the shooting. They said he met Frank Nichols, 59, of Pomfret, and Louis Holtz, 62, of Dunkirk, at Van Buren station, four miles west of here, and killed Nichols with a charge of buckshot from a shotgun. Holtz then was wounded in the stomach.

Business Certificate Filed.

Cosmo Morena of Port Ewen has filed a certificate with the county clerk stating that he is conducting a business at 22 Hasbrouck avenue under the name and style of United Banana Company.

Wiley Post Leaves Siberia on His Long Journey to Alaska

Was 15 Hours and 46 Minutes Ahead of the Record He Wants to Beat—Expects to Cut More Than a Full Day From 1931 Record.

Moscow, July 20 (AP)—Wiley Post began the long and arduous trans-Pacific hop of his world flight today when, 15 hours and 46 minutes ahead of the record he wants to beat, he hopped off from Khabarovsk, Siberia, for Alaska.

The sturdy, darling Oklahoman arrived at the eastern Siberia town at 3:45 a. m., today, Moscow time (7:45 p. m., Wednesday, E. S. T.) from Rukhlovo, 700 miles away, and was off again at 5:58 a. m. (9:58 p. m., E. S. T.), taking just two hours, 13 minutes for refueling his plane, the Winnie Mae.

His haste eclipsed the speed of communication facilities, and for several hours news of his takeoff from Rukhlovo and arrival at the jumping-off place was lacking.

His relentless pace, even in the face of almost complete exhaustion, was occasioned by his intense desire to better the mark he made in 1931 with Harold Gatty over much the same route.

He and Gatty were 129 hours, 34 minutes out of New York when they started the transoceanic hop from Khabarovsk; Post alone had an elapsed time at that point of only 113 hours, 48 minutes.

Post had seen his advantage whittled down to only 42 minutes because of rain and fog that he encountered on the trip from Moscow to Novosibirsk, Siberia, but he increased it by the fast flight to Khabarovsk and the fact he stayed there so short a time, whereas he and Gatty were grounded at Khabarovsk about a day.

Post left Irkutsk, 1,400 miles west of Khabarovsk, at 7 a. m., Moscow time, and arrived at Rukhlovo at 2:32 p m., Wednesday, Moscow time (6:32 a. m., E. S. T.). Bad weather forced him down there—he had planned to continue to Blagoveshchensk—and his plane was slightly damaged before he arrived there.

He left Rukhlovo at 11:25 p. m. Wednesday, Moscow time, (3:25 p. m., E. S. T.) and landed at Khabarovsk at 3:45 a. m. today, Moscow time (7:45 p. m., Wednesday, E. S. T.).

Reports conflicted as to his exact destination in Alaska, Nome or Fairbanks. It was considered most likely, however, that Fairbanks was his objective.

Shortly before reaching Rukhlovo the Winnie Mae brushed some tree tops, because fog forced him to fly close to the ground, but nevertheless he made a perfect landing despite the danger. He was very tired on arrival there, but he decided to forego the much needed rest in favor of gaining time.

Post told a newspaper correspondent at Khabarovsk that he expected to cut more than a full day from the 1931 record if all went well.

He explained that if he had had more favorable weather over most of the distance from Berlin to Khavarbosk he could have done even better.

The Oklohoman declared he hoped to reach Nome 16 hours after leaving Khabarovsk, but he did not say whether he intended to halt there.

Post would not discuss the possibility that he might encounter Jimmie Mattern, who was rescued after his own projected round-the-world hop came to grief in the leg from Siberia to Alaska. The flier merely smiled at a suggestion that the two might stage a race on the way to New York.

While the Winnie Mae was being refuelled he ate lunch with officials sitting on the grass at the Khabarovsk airport. His hosts offered him wine, suggesting that he needed it to keep up his strength, but he refused.

"Give me the bottle," he said, "and I will take it to New York and after the flight's over I'll drink to your health."

The American seemed delighted to renew his acquaintance with several airport attaches, including his old interpreter, whom he met at Khabarovsk in 1931.

Thunder storms lay ahead of Post in the vicinity of Khabarovsk but weather reports said flying conditions would become more favorable as he progressed.

KREISLER STILL REFUSES TO FIDDLE FOR GERMANY.

Berlin, July 20 (AP).—Fritz Kreisler, the violinist, said today that he would continue to refuse to appear in Germany despite the announcement by State Commissioner Hans Hinkel that in Hitlerite Germany "the free artistic activities of foreigners and non-Aryans (Jews) shall in no wise be hindered."

"I appreciate Commissioner Hinkel's announcement but before I appear I must see it established beyond peradventure of doubt that all my colleagues in the musical world, irrespective of nationality, race or creed, are not only tolerated but actually welcome," he declared.

Farmhand Killed By Train.

Watertown, N. Y., July 20 (AP).—Nellis Haskins, 55, a farmhand, was killed four miles from Chaumont early today by a freight train on the New York Central Railroad. Friends said they believed he sat down on the tracks to rest and fell asleep. The body was found by Ernest Westcott, Haskins' brother-in-law.

Howe About:

The Well-to-Do Emerson Sir Basil Zaharoff

By ED HOWE

IT IS commonly said we are all hypocrites. In no way do we deserve the reputation more than in our constant abuse of the rich, since every mother's son of us is struggling to become rich. If a rich man is a scoundrel then the first ambition of every man on the face of the earth is to become one.

The money power which every man hates, and misrepresents in his radical moments, is largely an agreement among men that when one of them borrows money from a neighbor, he should pay it back. The money power has never been as disreputable as the political power; the "union labor" power bombs more houses, and shoots more men, than does the money power.

When we use the word "rich," as applying to men and money, we actually mean the well-to-do. In my town of 12,000 I do not know one rich man, but know a great many who are well-to-do. In the country at large the actually rich are scarce, whereas more than half the men are well-to-do. More than half the farms of the United States are not mortgaged, so that more than half the farmers, (even the farmers!) are well-to-do. It is further worthy of note (in case the reader of this has reasonable intelligence and disposition toward fairness) that those in the well-to-do (or middle) class are the best specimens of men we have, and that those who have failed to reach the middle class have failed to display the average energy and intelligence.

• • •

Ralph Waldo Emerson spoke frequently of "His Island" (meaning the secluded retreat where he had a right to privacy). The curious and impudent overran his island constantly, as they do every man's. And when he had privacy, Emerson didn't like it very well. Once his wife and little son left him for a few days, and he was wretched because of loneliness. I want the company of polite and sensible people on my island, but in finding them must run the risk of being bumped into by the bores.

• • •

The average reader of newspapers and books will finally encounter the story of Sir Basil Zaharoff. It is said of him that although originally only a humble salesman of war munitions, he now controls the business internationally. He is further credited with bringing on the late World war, and with arranging to bring on another (now believed so imminent that Lloyd George has appealed to the churches to pray for peace).

It is not known where Zaharoff was born. Two birthplaces are given for him in Turkey, but his name is Russian, and there is much reason to believe he is a Greek. At one time he had an interest in Russian, French, Turkish, English and German armament concerns; it is charged, also, that his power extended to the United States. France has awarded him a Grand Cross of the Legion of Honor; he is a Knight of the Grand Cross of the British Empire. The Germans believe he double-crossed them during the war, and put a price on his head. Lord Beaverbrook, British newspaper owner, has not balked at saying: "The destinies of nations are his sport: the movements of armies his special delight;" but a New York newspaper says his chief pleasure is cookery in the gorgeous kitchen of his palace, and dining off solid gold plate.

Is there a man who has cornered the sale of war munitions internationally, and able to declare war at any time for his personal profit and pleasure? Or is the story of Zaharoff an invention of newspapers intended to rival in interest the radio and moving picture plays, now seriously reducing newspaper circulation?

• • •

My admiration for Bernard Shaw is only occasional; he is frequently a fool, of course, as we all are, but his average in intelligence, wit and fairness is a little higher than the average. I claim no more for him.

He said in his New York speech that in the United States the people believe morality is entirely concerned with women's legs. This seems to me both witty and wise since everyone should know morality means reasonably good behavior in everything.

• • •

I'm a new man, in that I know modernism. Still, I'm abominably handicapped by the old human nature.

• • •

In everything the first question to consider is: "What is the common sense of it?" And this everyone may know, since Nature has been teaching the common sense about everything thousands of years. One man is a fool about this, another about that, yet neither of them can afford to be a fool about anything and be safe.

• • •

I am eighty years old, yet a committee of Boy Scouts lately rang my bell, and I went laboriously downstairs to be lectured by impudent children on my duty as a citizen. . . . My natural burdens are heavy, and I try to meet them gracefully, but sometimes believe I am often annoyed unnecessarily and foolishly.

Early Local Money

Between the close of the Revolution and the establishment of the United States mint in 1792 specie currency was extremely rare in the United States. Tobacco, land orders, and paper money issued by Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Jersey and Vermont were the basis of trade.

Darrow Brought to Rotary by White

Harvey White, artist, author, social worker, and creator of the Maverick Colony, Woodstock, entertained the members and guests of the Kingston Rotary Club Wednesday noon in the main dining room of the Governor Clinton. Saying that art was most appreciated when seen, and that music was best understood when heard, Mr. White explained that instead of talking on either of these subjects, he would try to draw a word picture of Clarence Darrow, a man that he knew intimately.

The speaker then went on to say that Clarence Darrow, world famous as a criminal lawyer, was a man of magnetic personality, an individual so compelling and sincere in his beliefs that he numbered as many enemies as friends.

Mr. White first came in contact with Clarence Darrow many years ago when he was working in Chicago on social problems. Many of the most fascinating personalities of the day gathered at Hull House in Chicago, and Clarence Darrow was the most dominant force among them. At that time he was a Chicago lawyer, with his biggest cases still before him. People feared and respected him, and his beliefs on social problems were so sincere and radical that he proved a difficult man to understand. Mr. White found it impossible to know him intimately at that time, and not until five years later did he come to really know him.

"Clarence Darrow," continued the speaker, "was a disciple of Tolstoy the Russian count who gave up his vast income to become a peasant and write his beautiful novels of peasant life. Mr. Darrow read Tolstoy constantly, and was completely in accord with Tolstoy's beliefs and ideals."

"Later in life," continued Mr. White, "Darrow said that he would even help the devil evade the clutches of the law, because he believed that the law was filled with so many loop holes that the innocent suffered with the guilty. To Darrow, capital punishment was a horrible thing, and he fought against it throughout his entire career."

In continuing, Mr. White stated that Darrow would take any case, be the people rich or poor. Hundreds of cases that he handled were without pay, but when the parties interested did have the money to pay handsomely, Darrow took full advantage of it, for law was his method of earning a living, and in later life it paid him well.

"Perhaps," said the speaker, "the Loeb-Leopold case was the hardest one for the friends of Clarence Darrow to stomach, for it seemed that if any human beings merited the death sentence, these two thrill seeking boys, who murdered another youth for experimental purposes, richly deserved it. But Darrow managed to save them from death, and get them a life sentence."

Guests at the meeting were George Whitaker, Newburgh; John Makar, Hartford, Conn.; Sumner Sheppard, Kingston; Kenneth Francisco, Monticello, N. J., and H. B. Seine, Buffalo.

One new member, John Matthews, was welcomed into the club by President Alfred Schantz.

"Pill Boxes" Will Be Saved

Belgian authorities have put a stop to the demolition of all the German "pill boxes" in the Ypres salient. Some may be removed, but the most important ones are to be spared because they always afford great interest to visitors to the battlefields.

Borrowed cars prove Gulf-lube cuts oil costs 28½%

6 BORROWED CARS test four of America's leading brands of 25c motor oils—and every car brings in the verdict "Gulf-lube lasts longer!"

America's greatest 25c motor oil

THE Contest Board of the American Automobile Association recently put 4 famous 25c oils "on the spot" . . .

One after another, these famous oils were put in 6 borrowed cars—and tested for 4 days, 12 hours a day, on the Indianapolis Speedway.

When the figures were averaged, here was the amazing result—Gulf-lube went 28½% farther before a quart of oil had to be added. It beat every oil in every car!

Switch to Gulf-lube! You'll buy less oil. You'll pay less for repairs—for the oil that lasts longer is a better lubricant. Get Gulf-lube at any Gulf station!

President Roosevelt Sends Message

Perhaps the most highly prized of the many messages of condolence received by Mrs. Thomas J. Comerford following the death of Mr. Comerford Tuesday, is the following from the president of the United States:

White House,
Washington, D. C.,
4:55 p. m. June 19.

Mrs. Thomas Comerford,
Kingston:

I am distressed to hear of the passing of my old friend. As you know he and I worked and played together for very many years. The whole Hudson Valley has lost a fine neighbor and good citizen. My deepest sympathy to you and your family.

FRANK D. ROOSEVELT.

Mattern Reported Flying to Alaska

Washington, July 20 (AP).—Officers of the United States Coast Guard cutter Northland advised headquarters today they believed Jimmy Mattern, round-the-world aviator, had departed from Anadyr, Siberia, for Nome, Alaska, in a Russian seaplane.

The Northland said it had picked up a radio message from Anadyr saying a seaplane flown by Aviator Levanovsky was "flying today five hours 32 minutes in Nome."

This message, the Northland said, indicated Mattern had left Anadyr with Levanovsky.

The Northland reported, however, that it had received no word of a plane landing at Nome and would endeavor to verify its belief that the fliers were enroute to Alaska. The Northland now is cruising off the Siberian coast close to Anadyr and was instructed yesterday to try to get in touch with Mattern.

Britain Asks To End Gold Clause Of 1917

London, July 20 (AP) — Great Britain has asked American holders of the 1917 war loan bonds to accept abrogation of their gold clause to permit conversion from 5½ per cent to 2½ per cent sterling bonds.

An offer was made to change each $1,000 bond into a sterling bond of £260—at the rate of $3.84 against the $4.86 parity, reached yesterday by the dollar and pound.

The explanation was given that recent American legislation provides that gold obligations can be paid in currency "which at the time of payment is legal tender for public and private debts" and that "payment of interest and repayment of principal * * * can only be made in currency or coin which is at the date of payment legal tender in the United States for the discharge of debts, that is, paper dollars, and not gold dollars."

Report Less Hope in O'Connell Kidnaping

Albany, N. Y., July 20 (AP).—The hopeful attitude of the clan O'Connell gave way to fear and annoyance today. A fortnight has passed since Johnny O'Connell, the family scion, was kidnaped, but despite persistent rumors of successful negotiations with the kidnapers, the young guardsman remains a captive.

The prolonged dickering for his return has thrown gloom on the city. Surfeited with optimistic rumor that dies as quickly as it is born, residents here have begun to wag their heads and hint darkly that young O'Connell will never again been seen alive.

Authorities regarded the situation as serious. District Attorney John T. Delaney looked on the case as having reached the stage where it is life or death for the abducted youth.

"I feel that the limit of safety for the young man's life has about been reached," the district attorney said.

Pessimism, it is reported, has crept into the feelings of one of young O'Connell's closest friends, Miller Leonard. He and the O'Connell boy were inseparable pals. Until a few days ago Leonard shared the family's hope. But he seemed ready to join those who now take a gloomy outlook on the situation.

Six Arrested In Luer Kidnaping

Washington, July 20 (AP)—The Department of justice announced today that six persons had been arrested in a series of raids early today in the vicinity of Madison, Ill., on charges of having been implicated in the kidnaping of August Luer of Alton, Ill., banker, on July 10.

Those arrested were Randall E. Novell, Norma Vaughn, Pearl Hook, Mike Michalie and Mrs. Mike Michalie.

Percy M. Fitzgerald, who had been identified by Mrs. Luer as one of the men who kidnaped her husband, was arrested yesterday.

40,000 PERSONS ATTEND FUNERAL OF TWO AIRMEN.

Kaunas, Lithuania, July 20 (AP).—Forty thousand sorrowing persons attended the state funeral today of Shephen Darius and Stanley Girenas, the Lithuanian-American airmen who crashed Monday only 400 miles from Kaunas in a flight from New York.

Walking at the head of the funeral procession were the wife, child, sister and father-in-law of Darius and the brother of Girenas.

Members of the government and of the diplomatic corps were present at the funeral services. The belongings of the airmen and the remnants of their plane, the Lithuanica, are to be exhibited to the public later.

REWARDS OFFERED TO LOCATE MARXIST FOREIGN ACCOUNTS

Berlin, July 20 (AP)—In an endeavor to find Marxist parties' funds and to ascertain who have foreign bank accounts, police officials advertised today that a reward would be given persons divulging such information.

The move is preliminary to the confiscation of the sums as provided for in a cabinet decree issued last week ordering the seizure of private fortunes and even citizenship rights of "enemies of the state and the people."

The annual Sunday school picnic of the Lutheran Church of the Redeemer will be held at Hasbrouck Park Wednesday, August 9. In case of rain, on the following day. As upon previous occasions a program of games and fun for all will be provided. The Ladies' Aid Society will be in charge of the lunch and refreshment counters. Peddler Sentenced To Jail.

Lewis Hicks, 22, of Kingston, a peddler, was given ten days in the Ulster county jail Wednesday. Hicks, who is said to be out on parole, was arrested by Trooper Senecal, charged with creating a disturbance in Port Ewen. He was arraigned before Justice H. E. McKenzie.

Guests Entertained At Camp Preumaker

Camp Preumaker, July 20.—With members of the Kingston Kiwanis, Rotary and Triangle Clubs and their families as guests, Camp Preumaker, Kingston Y. M. C. A. boys' camp, enjoyed a gala day last Tuesday. The visitors, members of clubs which helped in the establishment and maintenance of the camp, enjoyed a good supper prepared by Mrs. Buley. There followed a game of softball between campers and guests, which the dads won by a score of 15 to 12, after much hilarity. After the game, most of the guests remained for the campfire at the camp council ring, presided over by Director Fuller. Here a treat awaited them in the form of songs, rendered to the accompaniment of his guitar by Robert Aronsam of Rifton. Songs by the campers, a sextet of visiting men, and a reading by H. B. Stein of the camp staff rounded out the program. The speech of welcome to the guests was delivered by Bud Isemann, president of the camp council, with response by the presidents of the three clubs represented.

While in camp the guests inspected the exhibit of insects and of handicraft articles prepared by the boys in camp, under the direction of Chester Baltz, Jr. The craft work will be on exhibition in the windows of Winne's hardware store later in the week.

Saturday night's "stunt" competition was keenly contested, with Cabin Six adjudged the winner on the basis of originality of the stunt and excellence of presentation. Participating in the winning stunt were Jack Schultz, Eugene Donnelly, Samuel Kevan, Robert Geisler, Robert Wicks, Clarence Rowland, Jr., Robert Mauterstock and Sanford Goertz and Harold Canfield and Don McCausland.

Popular activities in camp include baseball and hiking. Monday evening, at the insistence of the camp council, each cabin took its supper and had an adventure trip—four groups by boat and two by land. Reports of adventures experienced will be given by the boys at a subsequent campfire.

Baseball games with Camp Wahkonda, time-honored rivals of the "Y" camp, were keenly fought but disastrous from the Preumaker standpoint. The junir team Monday afternoon took a one-sided lacing from their opponents, while the senior team, attempting to gain revenge Wednesday evening, went down to defeat, 7 to 5, after a spirited and well-played contest. The game was a pitching duel between Pete Masterson of Wahkonda and Coach Kias of Camp Preumaker.

Camp is filled to capacity for the third week, while several applications had to be rejected because of lack of room. There are two or three openings for the week beginning July 27, but those desiring to enroll are urged to get their applications in early, as the first to be received will get the coveted places.

Camp Director N. H. Fuller wishes to emphasize the fact that visiting the camp is limited to visitors' days, and no one will be admitted to camp at any other time. Visiting days are Sunday, Thursday and Saturday evening.

CURRENCY SUGGESTIONS.

A recent Washington dispatch said, rightly or wrongly, that President Roosevelt has ordered some of his staff to make a survey of ways of managing the national currency "to prevent violent fluctuations in the purchasing power of the dollar." If the President really welcomes suggestions along this line, he'll certainly get them. There is nothing that money-minded Americans are more full of just now than currency theories. They are fairly bursting with ideas on the subject, and will be only too glad to tell the administration how to rope and break in the bucking national buck.

He will have a deluge of pleas for the rigid, old-fashioned gold dollar, for the variable-weighted gold dollar, for the demonetized gold dollar, the sixteen-to-one bimetallic dollar, the variable-ratio bimetallic dollar, the monometallic silver dollar, the flexible, unsecured paper dollar, the community price index dollar, the foot-pound or kilowatt-hour dollar, and perhaps a platinum, aluminum, or magnesium dollar, with endless combinations and variations of all these, and national and international control boards without end. The result being that the President, after due examination, will probably do what he planned to do in the first place.

TOY-LENDING

In spite of its awkward name, the "Toyery" established at New York University's Community Center seems to answer a long-felt want. It is a free lending agency where children who have very few playthings, or none at all, may come and borrow toys as books are borrowed from a public library. The toys have been donated, by stores and by individuals. Those that needed repairs have been fixed up. Scores of children have begun borrowing toys and are learning in the process to be good sports, to take turns with particularly desirable objects, and to behave themselves well.

The idea originated in the mind of a social worker with many years' service as probation officer in the Children's Court. She explains:

Children were constantly being arraigned for stealing toys. I thought that if we could establish a place where children could borrow toys, fewer criminal records would be started at an early age. If we can brighten up the child's home by lending him toys, it will keep him off the street and prevent his joining groups that would teach him to steal. His character will have an opportunity to develop.

There will be one problem to solve. Children have a way of becoming devoted to particular toys. Will the little borrowers be willing to return, after brief possession, the treasures they have always longed for?

SALARY AND BONUS

An investigation of a wrecked Ohio bank—by no means one of the country's biggest banks—shows that its president received half a million dollars in the last five years—mostly bonus. That fact isn't pleasant to depositors receiving 20 cents on the dollar.

The bonus system grew up in the recent boom years and survived in some cases through the depression. What it usually amounts to is that the directors and officers are giving bonuses to themselves. Stockholders often tolerate it, or approve it, when the company is making lots of money. But the practice may do more harm than good. It tends to over-emphasize the value of the men at the top, while ignoring those lower down who get far less while possibly rendering as useful service.

At any rate, present sentiment is against it. Where the system remains, as in such spectacular cases as that of the American Tobacco Company, whose president got a salary of $168,000 and a cash bonus of nearly a million in 1930 and 1931, plus another million in stock allotments, there must now be net profits of $12,000,000 before any such sections are granted. Many other corporations are dispensing with them entirely. As a business getter, the executive bonus may be useful. But in a time like this, with so many able men working harder in important public jobs, and getting smaller salaries without any bonus, it doesn't look right.

ISOLATION

It is an interesting case—that of Edward Valentine Gladstone, North Carolina mountaineer, who got his name into the papers the other day. He had lived 72 years only a dozen miles from Murphy (pop. 1,500) and had never set foot in that metropolis. Nor had he ever seen any town, or an automobile or a movie.

When some city men came along in a car, as Gladstone was having some corn ground at the mill, he admitted that he'd "kinda like to see that town before he died," so they took him down. He was nearly scared to death driving down the mountain road. But he survived, and now thinks maybe he'll move to town. We're seldom so isolated in this country. We are a nation of roamers. We like to get around and see things.

But that is often superficial. Mentally we don't get around so much. A good many of us have never traveled with our minds much farther than old Gladstone had with his legs. We usually remain in the same mental world, no matter how fast our bodies travel or where they go.

SKIN CANCERS CURED

Although it is inspiring to read of the wonderful cures of skin cancers missionaries are making with radium in China, it is with a feeling of shame that we remember that right in our own land a number of patients die every year who might be saved if they received radium treatment early enough.

It is not always that the skin cancer has not received treatment, as the patient has likely been using ointments on it from the beginning. He may have purchased a caustic and attempted to burn it slightly in an endeavor to "hurry" the healing process.

Dr. G. E. Richards, Toronto, reminds us that the percentage of cures of skin cancer is so high and the conditions of success are so well understood, that almost no patient should die of the disease. There is no longer the slightest doubt as to the value of radium in curing cancer.

The big difficulty of course is that in this disease Nature gives practically no help whatever, and if in the early stages the patient tries to treat the cancer himself, or the first physician to see it cauterizes the growth by heat, chemicals, or electricity, the possibility of a permanent cure, or a cure without considerable scar tissue may be lost.

Your physician will tell you that a simple sore which resists the usual methods of treatment may not be a cancer, but that the very fact that it is slow in healing keeps him watching it closely until he is satisfied that it is not.

There is no limit for the development of dangerous symptoms as Dr. Richards reports a case which took years to develop and another that developed almost to the point of hopelessness in six weeks. Both cases were healed by a single application of radium and have remained healed for three years.

One difficulty is that all tissues do not respond in the same manner, some tissues being very sensitive to radium and others more resistant. Thus treatment must be given with extreme care, so as not to damage good tissue.

However the lesson for us all is that the unsightly cancers in the face and other parts of the surface of the body now can be definitely cured in practically all cases if the patient goes or is sent early enough to a physician or hospital specializing in the use of radium.

Work on new road connecting Connelly with Esopus resumed after several months' delay.

Arthur Lenox, New York policeman, killed in automobile accident at Platte Clove police camp.

Ohio Gains in Area

Five hundred square miles have been added to Ohio area, not by acquisition but because of errors made by early surveyors of the day when Ohio became a state. The last federal census gives the land area of Ohio as 40,740 square miles and the gross area including water as 41,040 square miles. The Ohio State university under a recent survey has corrected these figures to give Ohio 41,283 square miles of land area and 44,832 square miles total area. This is the first time that accurate computation has been made of Ohio's share of the western end of Lake Erie.

REAL NEWS

THERE was a sound at the back door, and Mrs. Drill hurried in.

"Well, I never," she began. "You could have knocked me down with a feather when Scarlet told me you'd come home. Well, I never."

"There wasn't time to let you know," Georgie said; her spirits rose at sight of the woman's motherly face. "I've just made some tea if you'd like some, but there's no need for you to stay. I can see to myself."

"Tea's always welcome," Mrs. Drill said and fetched another cup. "Well, and what do you think of the news, Miss Georgie?"

"You mean about the house?"

"Yes, and about your uncle. I'll bet you was surprised."

"What about my uncle?" Georgie asked blankly.

Mrs. Drill stared at her.

"You don't mean that he hasn't told you?" she asked. "Well, I never. I should have thought it would have been the first thing he would have said, but perhaps he don't like to, him a gentleman born anyway as you might say."

"What are you talking about?" Georgie asked impatiently. "He told me he was going to sell the house if he could, and that he was going to live at the Boar's Head. But if there's anything else—"

"Live at the Boar's Head is right enough," Mrs. Drill said with deep satisfaction. "Of course he's going to live at the Boar's Head seeing that he's going to marry Mrs. Spears."

"Marry Mrs. Spears!" Georgie laughed. "I don't believe you," she said firmly. "I can't believe you," she amended her words. "Why, Mrs. Spears doesn't even like Uncle Edward."

"Ah, that's what she told you I expect," Mrs. Drill said knowingly. "But she don't tell everything to you or to anyone else. She's one of the deep ones. She's going to marry him alright, and a fine step up it is for her. They're going to be married next week in London. Everyone in the village knows about it, Miss Georgie. Most of 'em think that your Ma knew, too, seeing that she took you away all in a hurry like. I couldn't believe my ears when I heard that you'd come home again."

Come home! Georgie laughed, wondering if there was anyone in the world more homeless than she.

The village seemed deserted.

LATER on in the evening, having first made sure that her uncle was asleep in his study, Georgie walked down to the Boar's Head. The village seemed silent and deserted, but as she walked she seemed to hear a slow, limping footstep behind her, and once she turned her head quickly, almost expecting to see Nicholas Boyd's tall figure outlined against the dark sky.

If only—if only! She hurried on, trying vainly to outstrip the longing which she knew must go with her to the end of her life. It seemed hard that she must be one of the faithful sort, she thought wistfully; other girls whom she had known in London laughed and talked about the number of their love affairs as if it was quite natural to have half a dozen.

The Boar's Head was gay with light, and the sound of the radio. Georgie loved music, but tonight even the cheery lilt of a jazz tune deepened the ache in her heart.

Georgie pushed open the glass-panelled door which was proudly marked "Hotel Entrance" and came face to face with Mrs. Spears.

For a moment they looked at one another silently, then Mrs. Spears said helplessly: "Well, I never. Come right in. I was just thinking about you."

"I only came back this afternoon," Georgie said.

"So I hear." Mrs. Spears looked a little nervous, which must have been an unusual experience for her, as she led the way to her own private room.

"Take a seat," she said affably. "And tell me all the things you've been doing in London."

"There isn't much to tell," Georgie said. "And I came to say—to ask—" she floundered helplessly.

MRS. SPEARS rushed into the breach.

"To ask if it's true that I'm going to marry your uncle. Well, yes, it is. I expect you're surprised. I'm a bit surprised myself to tell you the truth, but there, I'm lonely and so's he, so when he said why not be lonely together, I said Right-ho! and there it was."

She patted her golden hair complacently. "You needn't be afraid that I won't look after him," she added.

"I'm not," Georgie said. "I'm only afraid that living here, he will drink himself to death."

Mrs. Spears laughed.

"Well, that's something you need never be afraid of," she said confidently. "I'm mistress here and he knows it, and what I say goes. Let me tell you, my dear, he'll be more sober living in this house than he's been for years, and if you come back in a month's time you won't know him and that's a fact."

"And seeing you—" Mrs. Spears went on, "makes me think of that Mr. Boyd I had here before you went away. You don't ever hear anything of him I suppose?"

"Do you?" Georgie asked.

"Well, I hear a bit now and then, but you can't believe half you hear and that's a fact. They said his operation was a failure, poor man."

She was struck by a bright idea. "What about a little drink just to celebrate the occasion? Just you and me together?"

"Yes," Georgie said.

"Half a bottle of the best Bubbly," Mrs. Spears said heartily. "I don't suppose you're exactly delighted to have me for an aunt, but there's nobody I'd rather have for a niece than you, Miss Georgie, and that's a fact." And as she passed Georgie on her way out to the bar she stooped and deposited a smacking kiss on the girl's cheek.

"There, now," she said. "And don't you worry about your uncle. He'll be alright with me."

"I know he will," Georgie said gratefully, and she was conscious of a little warm feeling round her heart as she realized that though life might be unkind, in this woman she had at last found a friend.

Georgie receives a touching letter, tomorrow.

Nature's Disguises

Leucosid crabs have rough shells of the same color as the beach on which they live, and cannot be detected until they move, according to the Smithsonian Institution, which says they have the most effective concealment device in nature. "Shame-faced" crabs, having two claws that fit over the face, burrow in the sand until completely covered.

Brought To Jail

John Kissinger, 34, of 2351 33rd street, Astoria, L. I., was brought to the Ulster county jail Wednesday to serve 50 days in default of a fine of $50 imposed by Justice Charles H. Bennett of Saugerties. He was charged with driving a car while intoxicated.

Training the Sprout

When a sapling first breaks through the nourishing soil a slender stake and a piece of string will start it growing into a straight and stately tree. But if it is allowed to make a crooked growth while it is still soft and pliable, a support of steel, a stout cable and a tourniquet, after it has attained its full proportions, will not force it completely back into the perpendicular.

400,000 Roses Per Ounce

Attar of roses, one of the costly perfumes, owes its high price to the fact that 400,000 roses are required to produce an ounce of the oil. So difficult is it to obtain it is often adulterated with sandalwood, but the pure oil, of course, is most desired. It is produced principally in India, Persia and other eastern countries. The attar is obtained from rose water, made from the crushed leaves.

A Washington Daybook

By HERBERT PLUMMER

WASHINGTON—At the conclusion of the special session of congress there was no lack of statements from politicians as to what had or had not been accomplished.

HERBERT PLUMMER

Joe Byrns of Tennessee, the democratic leader of the house, issued the first. His statement reviewed the session in glowing terms. Never before in the history of the country, said Byrns, in effect, had so much been done for the common good as was done in the special session.

Joe Robinson of Arkansas, who holds the same position in the senate as Byrns does in the house, followed suit with a statement in much the same vein.

Then came Bert Snell, the republican general of the house, sounding a note of dire warning. The fundamental precepts on which the nation was founded have been swept aside, said Snell.

McNary Silent

Conspicuously absent in these "reports" to the country was that of Charles McNary, republican leader of the senate, and generally regarded as one of the most astute of G. O. P. chieftains.

There can be no doubt that McNary has his own ideas about what has happened in Washington since March 4. He'll tell you, if you ask, that in his opinion four of the important issues certain to be thrashed out on the stump in future elections are the tariff, sound money, treatment of the war veterans and nationalism vs. internationalism.

But as far as the other things, such as what will be the result of the application of the industrial recovery act or the farm relief act, are concerned, he's keeping his thoughts to himself.

What McNary and the other republican leaders, who follow his ways of thinking, seem guarding against is the charge that they are attempting to throw a monkey wrench in the machinery set up for the purpose of bringing the country back to better times and more employment.

Politics In Suspense

They would like to be able to plunge in at this very moment and start to recoup the smashing losses they suffered last November. It's getting on the nerves of some of them, too, this apparent lack of activity.

But McNary and his aides seem convinced that complete cooperation is the best policy for the present.

Thirteen zinc and lead mills in the tri-state district around Picher, Okla., were prepared for reopening when demand showed signs of picking up recently.

Members of the University of Washington anatomy class were drafted to help preserve the skeleton of Tusko, elephant whose hide and bones weigh nearly three tons.

Hardenbergh Takes Active Interest in Reopening Bank Here

Enlists Aid of Mrs. Sarah C. McCommons Whose Husband Was a Personal Friend of Secretary Woodin —Receives Letter From Woodin's Secretary.

Among those who have been taking an active interest, although in a private capacity, in moves to further the reopening of the National Ulster County Bank and Trust Co., is William Hardenbergh of the Hardenbergh Co., 37 North Front street.

Mr. Hardenbergh, through his New York city business connections, is personally acquainted with Secretary of the Treasury Woodin and is also a personal friend of Howard C. Wick, secretary of the American Car and Foundry Co., of which Mr. Woodin was president before becoming secretary of the treasury. Mr. Hardenbergh also enlisted the aid of Mrs. Sarah C. McCommons, whose husband was a personal friend of Mr. Woodin.

Following a recent visit to Mr. Wick in New York and a letter from Mrs. McCommons, both were given the assurance that Mr. Woodin would receive any properly accredited committee representing the National Ulster County Bank, or its depositors, at any time.

Mrs. McCommons received a letter from Walter J. Cummings, an executive secretary to Mr. Woodin, in which he said, "Officials of the treasury department and of the office of the comptroller of the currency will be glad to confer at any time with any properly accredited committee of depositors regarding the possibilities and ways and means of reorganizing the National Ulster County Bank and Trust Co."

Mr. Hardenbergh, following his return from meeting with Mr. Wick Wednesday of last week, informed the bank of the result of his conference and submitted the letters received by Mrs. McCommons and himself.

FASHIONS by ELEANOR GUNN

If A-Hunting You Should Go

Copyright, 1933, by Fairchild.

What Midsummer Finds Us Wearing

New York—It is interesting to learn that while earlier in the season it was the printed dress to wear under the spring coat that was the favorite, now the call is for the jacket costume, the jacket with or without sleeves.

For dinner and evening wear, monotone triple sheers are the leaders, in lovely light and bright pastels.

While the jacket costume is very important in daytime fashions, for evening there is a tendency to wear a frock completing the costume with a jacket in velvet or velveteen. These coatees, while casual serve many purposes and have a decidedly practical quality, since they can be worn on into the fall season.

The Dark Ground Prints Score Heavily

New York—The two-piece dress is being worn this summer, and this not necessarily in skirt and jacket arrangements. There is every indication that the fall may see many costumes cut along these lines. This is an easy way to have a dress both heavy and light weight at one and the same time. Since many women feel uncomfortable in dresses the bodice part of which is heavy, they have, in the two-piece arrangement, a chance to overcome this difficulty. In the model sketched, the same fabric, satin as you may guess, has been used throughout.

In going about it has struck me rather forcibly that most of the prints worn by the smarter women have black grounds. There are ever so many black and white prints, of course, but the striking feature seems to be the black ground with chartreuse yellow, or, newer still, blue. Black and blue is one of the midsummer color developments. Black frocks with blue accessories, as well as black and white prints. The field-flower prints, outstanding successes of the summer, contain a good deal of black in one way or another, most frequently in the background.

Plaids and stripes, often making use of black, remain firmly entrenched in women's affections. Those whose interest lies in fall fashions tell me that stripes particularly will carry on.

The old saw, like mother, like daughter, is never truer than when applied to fashions. This being the case, darker colors have crept into the junior department too. Youthful wardrobes have toned down considerably. Navy easily leads, but there are some women who dote on violet and orchid cottons for their youngsters, and this season finds this color range particularly important. One of the newest fabrics for the younger set is sateen, which is liked in the small, neat necktie patterns. Printed pique has been good this summer, especially the darker grounds.

BLACK SATIN, OF COURSE

Black satin is used for the afternoon frock fashioned, with short capelet sleeves, in two piece fashion and ideal for early autumn satin that makes its appearance in the summer time.

Uncut Books

Four, eight or more pages of a book are printed on a single sheet of paper. In binding the book, these sheets are folded into their proper place and order. The edges are sometimes—or usually—trimmed by a paper cutting machine. Sometimes, however, the edges on one side or more are left "uncut," so that the first reader must separate them with a paper knife. A book so made is often described as "uncut" even after the pages have been separated, but a book dealer who describes a volume as uncut usually means to imply that it is in its original condition, with the pages unseparated just as it came from the publisher.

Lost Control of Car On Road to Highland

Carl Seeman evidently lost control of the car he was driving near the Sacred Heart Orphanage at West Park Wednesday afternoon and the car turned over in the ditch. Israel Chomerensky of 1818 Avenue P, Brooklyn, 63 years old, suffered three fractures of his right wrist. The W. R. Connor ambulance was summoned and brought the injured man to the Kingston Hospital where his injuries were attended to. The other occupants of the car were not injured.

Trooper Semeal of the Port Ewen patrol responded to a call and kept traffic moving while Sergeant Lockhart of Highland, who was notified of the accident while in Kingston, made an investigation. Apparently the car was driven on the shoulder of the road and the driver lost control. A wrecker from the Plass garage towed the car to the garage where after minor repairs and replenishing the oil and gasoline it was driven to the hospital here and turned over to the owner.

The Ferris Wheel

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

It was true. Rip, the Dog, was sitting on the seat of a ferris wheel, high up in the air. Willy Nilly had been having a fine time looking at the exhibitions of cows, ducks, sheep, and had watched the trapeze performers while Rip and Christopher Columbus Crow had been seeing the sights together.

They had stopped before the ferris wheel and had taken their places on one of the seats.

"You can't go up in my ferris wheel without paying," the man who was running it had said when he came along and found a dog and a bird waiting to take a ride.

"Pay him," Christopher Columbus Crow had whispered. He had wanted to keep his own money, as the silver shone in the sunlight and he hated to part with it, so Rip had paid.

The man who was running the ferris wheel was going to wait for more customers and then he thought he would start it before any others came. It had not been working so well and he was not sure whether it needed any repairs.

Rip and Christopher had gone around once when on the second turn it stuck, and the Dog and Crow were on a seat far from the ground—almost at the top.

"I'm afraid I'll fall," Rip had said. It made him so dizzy to look down at the ground.

"I hate to leave you," the Crow had replied, "but what is the good of a pair of wings if I don't make use of them?" He had flown away and left Rip not knowing what to do. It was thus that Willy Nilly found him.

Always Falls on Her Feet

If a cat has to learn to climb down a tree, she can fall instinctively on her feet. Science now affirms the instinctive capacity which tradition has always assigned to the cat to land on her feet. The falling reflex of cats has been measured and reported in the American Journal of Physiology. The fact is verified by one who experimented by dropping cats held in a horizontal position from varying distances to a soft bed of straw. All the cats were able to turn perfectly even when the distance of the fall was less than one foot. Motion pictures show that the cat first contracts her forelegs and then turns her fore part around. Then she contracts her hind legs, extends the forelegs and gives the hind part a turn. The cat can turn herself through any angle by continuing contractions of this kind. Even when unable to see, the cat's reactions were about as perfect and as quick.

Band Concert At TB Hospital Monday

The patients of the Ulster County Tuberculosis Hospital had a splendid treat Monday evening, July 17, when the American Federation of Musicians Local No. 215, gave a band concert for their benefit. Twenty-three musicians responded to the invitation to entertain the unfortunates, who cannot go to the parks to listen to the summer band concerts and all could hear from their beds, as the concert was given outside the windows on the platform loaned by the Board of Public Works.

The beautiful setting of a perfect summer evening with the music reverberating through the picturesque hills surrounding the hospital made the event one long to be remembered by the sick and the well folks too, who had the good fortune to be present.

An impromptu number was added when a beautiful brown horse and skilled rider appeared on the crest of an adjoining hill. The horse danced to the strains from the band, and fascinated those able to sit up and watch. The patients and staff of the hospital would like to know the name of the lovely animal and his trainer so they could thank them both.

The musicians have responded most graciously every time they have been requested to play for the hospital and the Ladies' Auxiliary wish to thank them heartily for their generous sacrifice of time and effort.

When it was too dark to see another note on the music sheets the group adjourned to the assembly room and Paul Zucca gave several numbers in his own inimitable style and Sam Bernstein made a speech of thanks on behalf of the hospital, auxiliary, staff and patients.

CHOICE TREAT TUESDAY AT THE HOME FOR THE AGED

On Tuesday afternoon of this week the family at the Home for the Aged, was given a choice treat. Miss Idella Hyde, laden with dainties for a four o'clock tea, came accompanied by Mrs. DeGarmo, Mrs. Wonderly and Mrs. Augustus Van Buren. After the tea, Mrs. Wonderly played a long, beautiful selection on the home piano, and Mrs. Van Buren played many airs, some of them new, but most of them the old loved ones that took one back to the days of youth.

Their visit was much appreciated and another warm welcome will await them when they come again.

200 Attend Clambake.

It is reported that about 200 persons attended the clambake given Wednesday evening by the New Paltz Rod and Gun Club. The bake was held on the grounds of the former Boy Scout camp on the Wallkill and those in charge had their hands full trying to take care of the unexpectedly large crowd present. A number from Kingston went down for the evening.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks gunk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly smart and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The cause for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food don't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas sickens up your stomach. You have a sick, bad taste and your breath is foul, often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get those two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resist substitutes. 25c at drug stores. © 1931 C. M. Co.

HOLLYWOOD SIGHTS and SOUNDS

By ROBBIN COONS

HOLLYWOOD — Ann Harding changed her mind about going back to the theater upon expiration of her current contract, and if one seeks reasons for that new agreement she has signed—for six pictures in two years—they are on the screen.

Two of them are "The Animal Kingdom" and "When Ladies Meet," and the other is "Double Harness," her co-starring film with William Powell, recently completed.

This trio of pictures, coming at the end of a contract which since her first big success, "Holiday," had brought her little in the way of prestige, is counted on to restore the Harding name to box-office strength.

"Double Harness" gives Ann a role that calls for all manner of histrionic display and for her presence on the screen a major part of the time.

Trapped!

As Joan Colby in "Double Harness" she carries out her business-like theory of marriage by tricking ne'er-do-well John Fletcher (William Powell) into wedding her. Fletcher dislikes the fetters of matrimony, but is becoming sold on it when Joan's spoiled young sister (Lucille Browne) in a poore, reveals the trick that precipitated the marriage.

Joan, desperately in love but gallant, is resigned to losing her husband, but fights on for his welfare and incidentally—after a lively and amusing climax—wins him back from the siren played by Lilian Bond.

Alice, Where Art Thou?

Among avowed candidates for the role of "Alice in Wonderland" is petite, blond, blue-eyed Helen Chandler. Helen has been trying to get various film companies to make the picture ever since she came to Hollywood four years ago—and now the studio that will make it is having an "Alice" contest to find an unknown for the role.

Signing of Lillian Gish to an R-K-O contract may bring about completion of a once-planned film venture with her opposite Francis Lederer, the new romantic star. Four years ago Lederer, then in Europe, was signed to support Miss Gish in a silent picture. Talkies arrived, Lederer could speak no English, and the contract was canceled.

But Lederer, English mastered now, now is under contract to R-K-O, too.

English Publisher Dead.

London, July 20 (AP).—Viscount Burnham, noted newspaper proprietor, editor and publicist, died suddenly today at his home here, aged 73. He continued his normally active life as recently as Tuesday when he attended a meeting of the joint select committee on Indian constitution reform, of which he was a member.

At The Theatres

Today

Kingston: "When Ladies Meet," Robert Montgomery, Ann Harding, Frank Morgan, Myrna Loy and Alice Brady are to be seen in sparkling and perfectly done comedy drama that hits a new high in screen entertainment. It's the eternal triangle again, with Frank Morgan especially good in the role of the excitement seeking publisher who falls for a modern young author, played by Myrna Loy. Her lover, Robert Montgomery, knows all about the affair, and as a last resort he brings the publisher's wife into the affair. From then on, with some of the finest acting of the year, the show moves on to the intensely dramatic conclusion. The plot is the negligible part of this pictpure, it is the acting and flawless dialogue that makes it the success it is. Excitement and glamour are lacking, but so human and understanding is this talkie, so finely done and flawless in its character portrayal, that it is most assuredly placed on the don't miss list of current films.

Orpheum: "The Conquerors" and "West of Singapore." An effort to duplicate "Cimarron" is this historic panorama of the growth of the west until the present day. It tries to bring optimism to those who worry about the future of the nation. Well acted, directed by William Wellman, and created on a gigantic and expensive scale, "The Conquerors" falls just short of being another epic picture. Richard Dix heads a cast that includes Ann Harding, Edna May Oliver and Guy Kibbee. "West of Singapore" is a thriller with Betty Compson.

Broadway: "Hello Everybody" and "Kiss Before the Mirror." Kate Smith, who vocalized her way to fame and fortune in the microphone, is the star of this homey tale that gives the radio artist many opportunities to burst into song. There is no denying that Miss Smith has an appealing voice, but Randolph Scott and Sally Blane handle most of the acting assignment. "The Kiss Before the Mirror" is the story of a husband who kills his faithless wife, and his actions almost persuade another man to do the same thing. Paul Lukas, Nancy Carroll and Frank Morgan are the principal artists participating in this rather gruesome drama.

Tomorrow.

Kingston: Same.

Orpheum: "So this is Africa" and "Self Defense." Bert Wheeler and Robert Woolsey put on an African picture seemingly for the purpose of ending all future "mellerdrammers" of the dark continent. In a subtle way, the hokum that burdened many of the African talkie efforts is taken for a gentle and humorous ride in the best Wheeler-Woolsey manner. There are some real laughs in this show, and Raquel Torres proves a lovely heroine. "Self Defense" offers Claire Windsor, Pauline Frederick and Theodore Von Eltz in a story of tangled lives and destinies.

Broadway: Same.

Clipped Words

Our ancestors took much longer to say things than we do, according to Golden Book Magazine. Here are ways in which we have economized in making life easier: Brandy was clipped from Brandywine in 1607. Cad was clipped from caddie (French cadet) in 1627. Chap was clipped from chapman in 1577. Cham was clipped from chamberfellow in 1720. Gin was clipped from Geneva in 1714. Grog was clipped from Grogram in 1740. Patter was clipped from paternoster in 1394. Pox was clipped from pockfigrion in 1902. Rum was clipped from rumbullion in the Eighteenth century. Whisky was clipped from usquebaugh in Eighteenth century.

Flashes of Life Sketched in Brief

(By The Associated Press).

Brownsville, Pa., July 20 (AP)—A. Morrow, manager of a grocery, approached a customer with that what-can-I-do-for-you look. The customer handed him a $10 bill saying: "One of your clerks gave me $16 too much in 1918 when I bought a sack of flour." Then he walked out.

Music Hath Charms.

Towanda, Pa.—A. B. Deitrich moved into a supposedly deserted house and found an occupant—a five-foot rattlesnake. He killed it in the parlor and found its nest in an old pump organ. Several sloughed skins indicated the reptile had made his home there several seasons.

That Bet's Settled.

San Diego, Calif.—John Odom, wharfinger at fisherman's pier, walked the plank because Arkansas did not go wet 3 to 1. He had bet Albert D. Olsen, who like Odom comes from Arkansas, that it would.

Odom, fully clothed and with a huge ball marked "350 lbs." tied to his neck, walked off a ten-foot plank and splashed to the water 30 feet below the steamer dock. The weight turned out to be an inflated rubber ball. But Olsen agreed that a tuna clipper, by pumping its bilges on the spot, evened things up satisfactorily.

This Is Consoling.

Madison, Wis.—Prof. E. Ragsdale of the University of Wisconsin psychology department says no one ever does anything right, and the person who believes he is right is only making "an intelligent mistake."

It is impossible, he said, to "get a correct start" in doing anything because if a person got the right start "there would be no sense in learning at all."

"We probably always do things wrong," he said, "and we never do them right."

Yes, They Like Bananas.

Chicago—A tip to New Yorkers. If they would please the Italian trans-Atlantic flyers, give them bananas.

Erik Dahlberg, maitre d'hotel at the Drake estimated they put away 1,000 of them.

"They had them," he said, "for breakfast, lunch and dinner."

She Okays Shooting.

Albany, N. Y.—"You are accused of shooting at your son-in-law," Police Judge Wagner informed Mrs. Mary F. Conley, 53.

"He ought to be shot, your honor," said Mrs. Conley.

"Your daughter also has filed a complaint against you."

"Well, she ought to be shot, too."

Mrs. Conley was held for a hearing.

Bee in Judge's Bonnet.

New York—Albert Dubriel, who keeps bees on his roof, answered the complaint of neighbors, who said his bees sting.

"These bees," said Dubriel, "are good bees. One of the tenants went up on the roof to take a sunbath with no clothes on. The bees covered his body but didn't sting him.

"They have to be pretty sore to sting. After bees sting, they die, and they know it."

Magistrate Mason said he'd pass the case to some judge more expert on bees.

They're Thankful.

Washington—Mrs. Joseph Zanelotti, 42, has given birth to 20 children.

Her husband was out of work 13 months.

Mrs. Zanelotti had been trying to think of a good name for the newest Zanelotti.

Her husband got a job.

The baby's name is Eleanor Roosevelt Zanelotti.

Fifteen of the children are living, a dozen at home.

Fight For Life Fails.

Baltimore—After physicians had taken 1,124 stitches in an effort to save his life, Walter Judah, 40-year old negro, died in a hospital here.

Police said another negro, Monroe T. Young, 38, who was arrested, slashed Judah on the head, neck, arms and body with an ordinary pocketknife in a fight over a small amount of money.

A New Deal For Twinkling Toes.

New York—The feet and nerves of dancing instructors will get a new deal under a code being formulated. It fixes a maximum work week of 28 hours.

"One hour an instructor will be working with a boy of 20, while the next hour she will be forced to change her pace for a pupil 93 years old."

"Little Stories for Bedtime" by Thornton W. Burgess

PETER IS REMINDED OF AN OLD FRIEND

WHEN Peter Rabbit reached the dear Old Brier Patch he had a lot to tell Mrs. Peter. He was so full of all he had learned about Short-Tail the Shrew that he just had to tell some one, and the only one about was little Mrs. Peter. She listened patiently, for in most matters little Mrs. Peter is a most patient person.

"And to think that he has been a close neighbor all this time and I didn't know a thing about him!" ended Peter.

"Huh!" replied little Mrs. Peter, "I don't see anything surprising about that. There are more things you don't know about and never will know about, Peter Rabbit, than ever you have heard or dreamed of. That is why it is so silly of you to think you know all there is to know."

Peter pretended not to hear, and continued to think about Short-Tail the Shrew. "He isn't a Mole and he isn't a Mouse; he is sort of halfway between the two," thought Peter. "He spends a lot of time under ground like Miner the Mole, and that is why his eyes are not much bigger or better than Miner's. At the same time he is quick on his feet like a Mouse and does a lot of hunting on top of the ground as well as under it. He isn't either Mole or Mouse, but is like both. That musky smell certainly is unpleasant. I don't wonder Reddy Fox turned up his nose. Speaking of musk reminds me that I haven't seen Jerry Muskrat for ever so long. I think I'll run over to the Smiling Pool this evening and see what the news is there."

Peter hadn't intended to say this aloud, but he did. It is a way he sometimes has of talking to himself.

"The best thing for you to do is to stay at home where you belong," declared little Mrs. Peter rather sharply. "I should think you would want to stay at home once in a while."

Peter looked a little sheepish, but said nothing. When jolly, round, red Mr. Sun slipped down behind the Purple Hills to go to bed, Peter watched the Black Shadows creep out across the Green Meadows and then started for the Smiling Pool. He knew that at this time of day he would be almost sure to find Jerry Muskrat, for it is the time of day when Jerry loves to swim about and go visiting.

Nor was Peter disappointed. Jerry was just climbing out on the Big Rock and in his mouth was a mussel, which is what some people call a fresh water clam. Peter knew better than to ask any questions until Jerry had finished his feast. If Jerry knew that Peter was there, he made no sign. Very deliberately he opened the mussel and ate it, dropping the shell in the water. When he had finished smacking his lips he looked over to where Peter sat on the bank.

"Good evening, Peter," said he. "You are quite a stranger. Have you come over to help me build a new house?"

"Have I what?" cried Peter.

"Have you come over to help me build a new house?" repeated Jerry. Then he chuckled at his own joke, for he knows just what a lazy fellow Peter Rabbit is.

Prospect of Decreased Canadian Wheat Crop Among Factors Easing Load of World Surplus

By ALEXANDER R. GEORGE.

Washington (AP).—Prospects of a Canadian wheat crop smaller than the 350,000,000 to 400,000,000 bushels estimated by U. S. government observers about a month ago are now indicated.

The official Canadian estimate of July 1 was for a yield of 328,000,000 bushels, but private estimates based on continued unfavorable weather point to a harvest of some 40,000,000 to 80,000,000 bushels under the July 1 figure.

Large Reduction Indicated.

With a carryover of about 150,000,000 bushels added to the official estimate of 328,000,000, the total Canadian supply this year would be 478,000,000 bushels as compared with 559,000,000 bushels last year. A further reduction of 50,000,000 would bring the supply approximately 100,000,000 bushels under that of 1932.

This prospect, together with the short crop in the United States, crop conditions in the southern hemisphere less favorable than a year ago and an indicated European production about the same, tends to offset the burden of a world wheat surplus sufficient to supply needs for a year or more.....

Experts say that the effect of Canadian prospects on United States markets is difficult to measure in view of overshadowing domestic developments contributing to prevailing high wheat prices.

These are listed as the government's inflationary program, the prospect of a crop less than domestic consumption requirements and the longer range outlook for a reduction in wheat acreage.

While wheat prices have advanced 50 to 60 cents in the United States, world prices, which are more responsive to world production and consumption indices, have risen only 15 to 20 cents. Despite a very large carryover in this country, wheat prices in this country have been maintained at a level of 20 to 25 cents above an export parity with the world market.

The fact that the United States consumes 80 per cent or more of its own production, coupled with the prospect of a crop less than enough for domestic needs, has contributed to this unusual situation.

Black and dotted areas on the map show the wheat production regions of North America. The charts give acreage and export areas pertinent to consideration of the U. S. and Canadian crops in their market effects one on the other.

Canada, consuming only 25 to 30 per cent of its average production, must depend to greater extent on favorable world prices for wheat, although it does have better export outlets due to its long waterways and Empire trade preferences.

Processing Tax Considered.

There has been strong sentiment in the Canadian grain belt for acreage reduction as a means of bolstering prices, but the eastern provinces, maritime and industrial, do not relish the idea of carrying the burden of a processing tax or other form of assessment likely to be passed on to the consumer in the event of a payment of a bounty to wheat growers who limit production.

Recent increases in the price of wheat at Winnipeg and the prospect of the United States going out of exporting are also expected to diminish somewhat the enthusiasm of Canadian wheat growers for reduction of their own acreage.

The United States is the only one of the important wheat producing countries which has materially reduced wheat area in the past four years. In the 1929-1930 crop year it had a production acreage of 62,700,000 acres, while in the 1932-1933 season the amount was 55,200,000 acres.

Others Increase Acreage.

The Canadian production acreage in 1929-1930 totaled 25,300,000, which was increased to 27,300,000 in 1932-1933. Argentina and Australia remained about on the same level, while Europe, excluding Russia, increased its production acreage from 70,100,000 to 74,900,000 in the same period, and Russia jumped from 73,500,000 to 88,700,000.

Should the United States decide to dump its exportable surplus and thus maintain a high level of prices within its borders the result would constitute a problem to Canadian wheat interests.

Weird Plan to Seize Province of Georgia

Los Angeles, July 20 (AP).—A Grandarkian story of a bold plot to invade Soviet Russia, seize the tiny province of Georgia and hoist upon a double seated throne the Georgian Princes Serge and David M'Divani, was published today by the Examiner after Mary McCormic, opera singer and estranged wife of Serge, said her support of the conquest had been solicited.

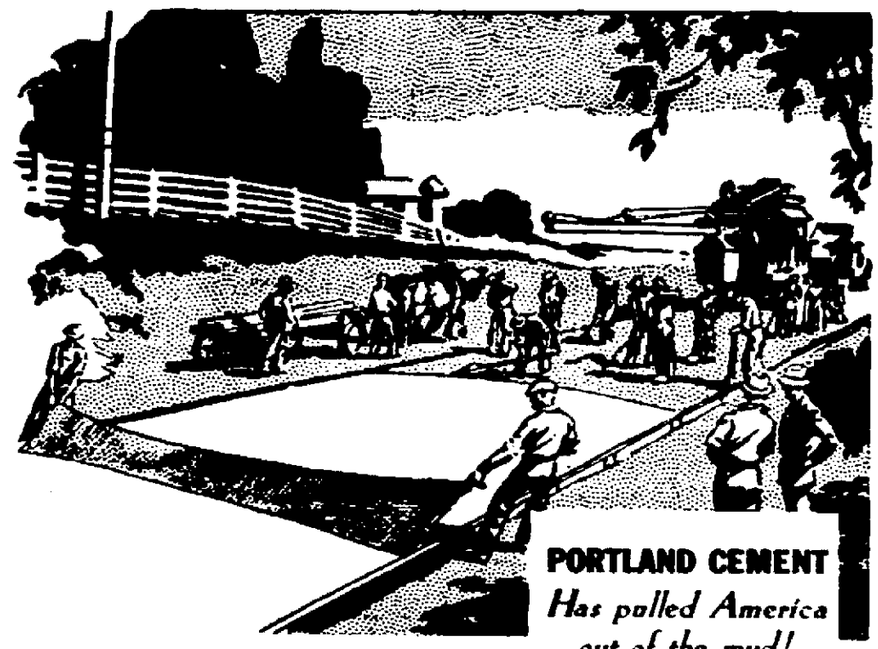
The plot had been hatched in secret meetings in hidden rendezvous, the newspaper said, and recruits, promised titles and billions in oil, have been enlisted from the ranks of the unemployed.

The newspaper said uniforms have been issued to the 400 men enlisted and at least one California patriotic organization, permitted to bear fire-arms, has been asked to throw its forces in with the revolutionists.

Whether they knew it or not, the Princes David and Serge, now on the high seas en route to Los Angeles to quell a marital revolution with their respective wives, Mae Murray, film actress, and Miss McCormic, have been elected "Generals" in the army, the Examiner said, and will be asked to take over command when they return.

Miss Murray recently filed David for divorce. Miss McCormic, who several weeks ago sued Prince Serge for separate maintenance, said she had been requested to make "a pep talk to keep up the morale of the forces until the M'Divani brothers arrive here."

Build Roads!



THAT GIVE MEN WORK · · THAT GIVE YOU DRIVING SAFETY, CONVENIENCE COMFORT AND LOW DRIVING COST

The United States Government has sounded the call, by giving a direct grant to the States, of at least four hundred million dollars for highway improvement. This is part of a vast program of public works to spread national employment and to stimulate business.

This work will be done through your own State Highway Department. The Federal Government asks no return except that the money be expended wisely—that the improvements be permanent, substantially built and of a type that gives men work.

CONCRETE ROADS meet every specification. They are permanent. Maintenance cost is much less than that of any other type. They give you the greatest driving safety, convenience and comfort. They cost less to drive over—saving you gas, tires, repairs and depreciation. They will give work to men now on doles in your community. Money will flow across the counters of home stores.

Insist on CONCRETE for your roads—get the most and the best road for the money—and the maximum employment for labor!

Tannery Brook House At Woodstock Sold

Woodstock, July 20.—This week the Tannery Brook House, one of the most genuinely typical of Woodstock landmarks, changed hands, when by direct sale it passed into the possession of Mr. and Mrs. Lamonte V. Simpkins, who for several years have conducted The Little Art Shop in the village, and who will re-open their shop at the new location the first of August. Mr. and Mrs. Peter Longendyke, who maintained their residence at the Tannery Brook House for 20 years, have in turn purchased the former Charlie Cooper residence, near the Lutheran Church.

The Tannery Brook House is known everywhere, not for what it once represented but for what it has become the symbol of since Longendyke ownership. It was there that Mrs. Longendyke established the boarding house which carried on and enlarged the reputation she achieved when, having come to Woodstock from Saugerties in 1902, she fed the first newly arrived artists who eventually achieved fame for the village.

The Tannery Brook House is of early dating. It was made into a residence by the Longendykes. Prior to that time it was a part of the Davis estate, a family of tanners and farmers, who used the building as a combination livery stable and carriage shop. It takes its name from the stream which flows close to the house, crosses the main road and drops precipitously a hundred yards away where once the thriving tannery stood.

It is unusual with any variety of local landmarks anywhere that they seem more vitally a part of the present than of the past. It is in this that perhaps the greatest tribute to the Longendykes can be paid, a tribute well-founded when it is considered that every year since the house commenced taking boarders many people without funds and no other assurance of credit save their own agreement to pay in the future have been kept for months by Mrs. Longendyke. Also, Mrs. Longendyke states that in her long contact with such people only once or twice have agreements been ignored.

State Troopers' Headquarters

For nine years Tannery Brook House was the headquarters of the district detachment of New York State Police under Sergeant James Cunningham. It was there that Mrs. Longendyke said she first came to know her boy, "Jim," and that soon after his arrival, a new pet, a canary, was christened "Jim", and still warbles merrily on. Speaking of the incident in passing, Mrs. Longendyke said of Sergeant Cunningham, whose detachment later was moved, that there she first came to know him, respect him, found him blessed with an undeviating love of friends and blessed with great courage. "I found him fine and he left here fine. He is still fine," Mrs. Longendyke said.

One of Mrs. Longendyke's prize possessions recalls the tragic passing two years ago of a young member of the art colony. The possession is an excellent landscape of the Shady and Bearsville valley and was painted by Miss Edith Stevens, who took her own life at Gloucester, Mass., in a period of despondency over the progress of her career.

Percy Holt, artist, of Galveston, Texas, has for 17 consecutive summers taken his meals at the house. And during all the years that Mrs. Longendyke has conducted her boarding house the only employe she has had has been Miss Ada Russell, who has been at the house eight years. The remainder of the time, save for very short periods of assistance from Miss Florence Peper, help came from Mrs. Longendyke's five daughters, who live in Woodstock.

"I count it remarkable," Mrs. Longendyke said, "that none of my daughters has ever left Woodstock, not because in itself it is unusual in family relationship, but because it shows that few Woodstockers ever leave, and when they do it is always to return."

It was at the Tannery Brook House a year ago last month that Mr. and Mrs. Longendyke celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in the presence of their children and grandchildren and many friends. One son, Henry Longendyke, died in the A. E. F. service.

Mrs. Longendyke plans no idleness. It is her intention to keep her friends about her and to serve dinners to those who may wish to avail themselves of Tannery Brook House atmosphere in their new residence.

Talks to parents

The Depression Child—No. 4
By BROOKE PETERS CHURCH

Marion came home from school the other day looking as though she had been in an automobile wreck. Her dress was soiled and rumpled, her face streaked with tears.

Marion is 13 and though an inveterate tom-boy, is yet not given to fighting. On being questioned, she explained that a group of children at school had dragged her about the grounds during recess.

Until this year of depression Marion has always gone to a private school and is now for the first time being thrown with a large and mixed group of boys and girls in the village high school.

Thousands of children throughout the country are having the same experience, and their mothers are wondering why a child who "wasn't doing anything" should have to be subjected to such treatment.

It seems to be a "pack spirit" quite instinctive and without any real malice. The new child is different and because of her hitherto more exclusive training she becomes an object of scorn.

Some parents, unable to endure the persecution, complain to the principal, or even try to lecture the offenders or speak to their parents.

None of these counsels is likely to be effective.

If she gets commiseration at home and an assurance that as soon as times are better she will leave public school and return to a more congenial atmosphere, she will makes no effort to adjust herself.

If, in her parents' desperation, she is withdrawn at once, she is receiving her first lesson in quitting. Encourage her to be a sport; to laugh at her tormentors, or to fight back if need be. Her second year likely will see her installed as a member of the group, her past forgotten.

Suffered 30 Years With

PILES

Tried Modern Internal Treatment and Now Is Well—Read Every Word

Read what this Buffalo man writes—it seems like a miracle. "Have been troubled with bleeding and protruding piles for 30 years—was about to go to hospital when a friend told me about Hem-Roid. After the first week's treatment I have no signs of piles and feel like a different person." (Name on request.)

Hem-Roid is the prescription of Dr. J. S. Leonhardt and is such a wonderful one that thousands who once suffered agony and distress are now free from torturing piles. You can get Hem-Roid tablets at McBride Drug Stores or any live druggist and if not joyfully satisfied with the help one bottle gives you—money back.

Farmer Sees Profit From This Deal In "Futures"

"'Way down south in the land of cotton"—there have been many scenes like this recently, a sort of reverse on cotton "futures," in which the grower agrees, in effect, not to deliver his cotton. James Allen, Georgia planter, signed his acreage reduction agreement and then went out at once and plowed up the prescribed portion of the crop, confident that the program will work out to his benefit.

Financial and Commercial

New York, July 20 (AP)—Financial markets tried to steady today, after the sharp relapse of yesterday, but nervous twinges added considerable uncertainty to the attempted convalescence.

After some irregularity in the early hours, most of the badly battered stocks of the previous session rallied 1 to around 3 points. Even the weak alcohols attempted a mild come-back, although they again turned heavy after noon and other groups sympathetically cancelled most of their early advances or replaced them with losses. The principal grains sagged, rallied and then dropped sharply, wheat getting below $1 a bushel. Cotton was easier as were silver futures. The dollar turned upward in foreign exchange markets, gaining nearly 10 cents against the pounud sterling at one time. Bonds were irregular.

The so-called "wet" shares that added some 4 to 14 points to their previous slump included American Commercial Alcohol, National Distillers, Commercial Solvents, U. S. Industrial Alcohol and Crown Cork. Declines of 1 to 3 or more were eventually suffered by Du Pont, Case, Union Pacific, U. S. Steel, United Aircraft and Goodyear. Alaska Juneau, U. S. Smelting, Santa Fe, Johns-Manville, McIntyre Porcupine, Chrysler and a number of others were up 1 to about 3 before easing with the rest of the market.

Some of today's early recoveries in stocks were attributed to covering by several operators who went "short" at the beginning of yesterday's tumble. Market observers pointed out that, just prior to Wednesday, active bears were few and difficult to find. With the first indications of a corrective movement, however, these came out from hiding and cashed in sizeable profits around the opening.

A sharp rally of the dollar in relation to foreign currencies, especially the British pound sterling, was attributed by bankers here partly to the announcement of a conversion offer for the united kingdom 5½ per cent gold bonds. The conversion plan, it was explained, brought an increase in arbitrage business. Dealers said there was little evidence of official intervention in either the pound or French franc rates.

FIRE DEPARTMENT CALLED OUT TODAY

The fire department answered three alarms today all of which were grass fires. Two were on Tremper avenue and the other in the vicinity of the Ulster County Tuberculosis Hospital. This was the worst of the three. A line of hose had to be stretched to subdue the blaze, which feasted on the dried grass and twigs.

POULTRY

COMFORTABLE HENS BETTER PRODUCERS

Pays to Keep Flock Healthy and Free From Lice.

The usual summer decline in egg production may be overcome to some extent if flock owners will take precautions to keep their birds healthy and comfortable.

This means checking the depredations of mites and lice, providing adequate shade, giving ample feed, supplying fresh water, and then culling the non-producers.

C. F. Parrish, poultry extension specialist at North Carolina state college, says mites are night prowlers. They hide away in the cracks and crevices of the house, usually on the perch poles, in daylight and come out at night to attack the hens. If the poles and house are thoroughly cleaned with a mixture of old cylinder oil and kerosene in equal parts, the pests may be controlled. This treatment should be given two or three times during the hot months.

Lice remain on the birds at all times and once a flock becomes infested, it is always infested until the pests are eradicated. The birds may be dusted or dipped with some preparation or with sodium fluoride or the perch poles may be painted in the late afternoon of a warm, still day with nicotine sulphate.

Parrish recommends that the laying house be kept well ventilated in summer. There must be fresh air without direct draft. This shows a necessity for intakes and outlets properly arranged. He says the birds must be kept cool if they are to continue laying.

Shade is a necessity on any poultry farm and artificial shelters must be provided if natural shade is lacking. Laying hens also consume an abundance of water and a supply that is fresh and clean needs to be available at all times.

Keep Poultry Growing With Nourishing Feeds

Low prices for poultry products are largely responsible for the tendency on the part of chicken and turkey growers to "let down" on the feeding of proper growing rations for the young chickens and poults even though the market value of feeds is low, says O. C. Ufford, extension poultryman at the Colorado Agricultural college.

Such a practice is poor economy and will result in underfed pullets going into the laying houses this fall. They will start laying later than normal and when laying starts they will break under the strain of heavy production.

With poults that are being forced to range for all their food, an over-diet of grasshoppers and other feeds they can pick up is not conducive to the best development and growth.

Minerals in the form of bonemeal and green feeds and water are important parts of the growing ration and play a big part in the health and normal growth of the young birds.

Comb-Dubbing Time

To avoid trouble with frozen combs on male birds and consequent loss of fertility, many poultry keepers dub, or cut, the combs of males that are to be saved over as breeders—especially Leghorns, Minorcas and other breeds that have large combs. Summer is the time for the job, says a writer in Country Gentleman, and it is best to do it while males are about half grown. Ordinary tailor shears may be used. One cut is made to remove the points and major portion of the comb at the base, and another cut to take off the larger portion of the blade. A third cut removes the major portion of the wattle. One method of stopping the bleeding is to take a feather from the bird and lay it along the cut surface; but the most satisfactory method is to apply iron subsulphate to the bleeding surface, making sure that none of it reaches the mouth of the bird, for death will result if any is swallowed.

Ducks Lay in Morning

Ducks lay their eggs early in the morning and should be kept confined until ten o'clock. If allowed to roam they may lay their eggs among the shrubbery or elsewhere, where they might be stumbled on or lost. The average white Pekin duck, one of the most popular layers among the breeds, lays about 100 eggs a year. Ducks do much better in the first laying year than in the second. In the second season they are invariably slow in getting started.

Move the Feed Hoppers

Where outdoor feed hoppers are used for the growing stock it is a mistake not to frequently change their location. They should be moved a short distance every few days otherwise the ground adjacent is almost sure to harbor disease germs which will cause trouble. By placing them some distance from the brooder house the pullets will be encouraged to occupy cleaner ground and be less apt to become infected with worms and coccidiosis.—Missouri Farmer.

Diagnosed His Own Case and Died as Predicted

Very few of us would go to any particular trouble to hear a sentence of death pronounced upon us, but that is exactly what a medical professor at Budapest did, says a writer in Pathfinder Magazine. Confronted with disquieting symptoms, including a pain in the chest, he had his suspicions, but his colleagues would tell him nothing except that he was "all right."

Finally he wrote to a Vienna consultant, with whom he had corresponded but had never seen, telling him that he had a patient in whom he suspected cancer of the chest, and requested a verification of diagnosis. Then getting on the train, he presented himself as that patient. The Vienna doctor looked him over, told him he was getting along nicely, and sent him home. Then he wrote a letter to the Budapest professor, confirming his own diagnosis and saying the "patient" had but two weeks to live. The professor, who had lived a very secluded life, withdrew his savings and made whoopee the rest of his life, which lasted only a few days over the allotted two weeks.

Balbo and Officers Guests of Roosevelt

Thirty-Nine Officers And General Italo Balbo Visit President Roosevelt—Eleven Planes necessary For Trip.

Floyd Bennet Field, New York, July 20 (AP)—Breaking their return flight to Italy to pay a call upon President Roosevelt, General Italo Balbo and 39 of his officers took off in United States army and navy planes for Washington at 8:15 eastern standard time today.

The black bearded young head of the Italian Air Force was in the first plane to leave the ground, the navy cabin amphibian which is assigned to the personal use of President Roosevelt and such of his distinguished guests as he may designate.

General Balbo was accompanied by E. W. Spencer, his naval aide. The plane was piloted by Lieut. F. D. Owers of the Anacostia Naval Station.

The Italian General seemed in happy mood as he boarded the plane. He even halted a moment to pose smiling for several amateur photographers who had slipped by the police lines.

General Pellegrini, second in command to General Balbo, was in the second plane to take off. He was in a low wing plane with a bullet shaped body.

In all 11 planes were required to carry the leader of the Italian Armada and his staff to the official reception in Washington.

40 Stitches To Close Cuts On Man's Head

New York Chemist Said to Have Been Struck By Automobile on Woodstock-Saugerties Road.

Emil Rausch, a chemist residing at 3623 Provost avenue, New York city, was brought to the Kingston hospital about 3:30 this morning, unconscious and suffering from a dozen or more cuts on the head, a cut under the chin, a bruise under the eye and a slight bruise on the shoulder.

Rausch was brought to the hospital by Helmuth Hartmann, who rooms with him in New York city.

The sheriff's office was notified and Deputy Vredenburgh brought Hartmann to the court house for questioning. Hartmann's story is that the two left New York city around 10 o'clock Wednesday night to drive to the home of Otto Spiess, who lives near Saugerties. They drove up Route 28 to Woodstock and then took the Woodstock-Saugerties road. Hartmann states that they had stopped the car and Rausch was standing along the roadway when he was struck by another car and that he became unconscious while being taken to the hospital.

Sergeant Cunningham was called and he and Deputy Vredenburgh went over the route Hartmann claims the two were on, but could find no traces of blood or signs of an accident.

Later in the forenoon Rausch regained consciousness and confirmed the story told by his companion and Hartmann, who had not been placed under arrest, was allowed to go.

Dr. Johnston, who treated Rausch, found it necessary to take over 40 stitches to close the various cuts about his head.

A Goddess' Mistake

Aurora was one Greek goddess who didn't think quite far enough. Known as the mother of the winds, Aurora, who was the daughter of Hyperion, fell in love with a mortal, Tithonus. Through her intercession, the other gods granted Tithonus immortality, but Aurora forgot to include perpetual youth in her request and Tithonus grew older and older until he became so feeble that Aurora was forced to tend him as much as a helpless baby.

Gradually Tithonus grew more and more shriveled until finally Aurora, no longer able to devote her time to him, but unable to end his life, changed him into a cricket.

Poems of Beauty Selected by BYRNE BROS.

MOTHER

By N. Y. Anonym

"I'll stay home to-night," says mother,
"You just run along."
And when we leave, she's humming the tune of an old time song.
"Darling I am growing old
Silver threads among the gold.
But my darling you will be
Always young and fair to me."
And we heard through the night the refrain of that song.
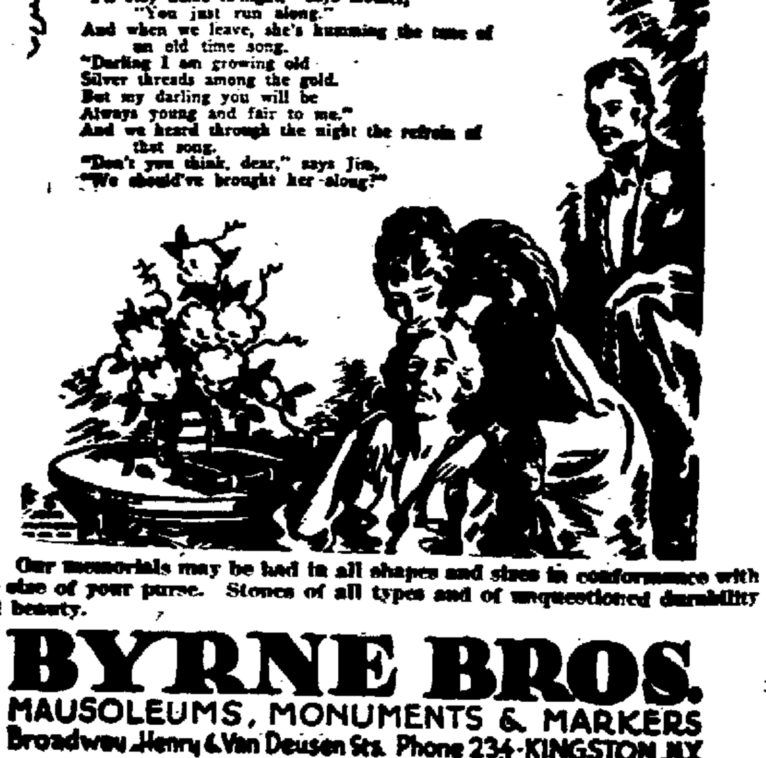
"Don't you think, dear," says Jim,
"We should've brought her along?"



Our memorials may be had in all shapes and sizes in conformance with the size of your purse. Stones of all types and of unquestioned durability and beauty.

The Penny

By ELOISE BENNETT

© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate. WNU Service.

"You may go home, now, Thomas." Laura McElroy settled her small and aged body back comfortably against the taupe velours of her car, surveying with satisfaction the assortment of small packages by her side. Between the thin, veined forefinger and thumb of her left hand she held a penny. After her eyes had wandered appraisingly over the packages they turned on the penny.

It was an Indian head penny. It had come into Mrs. McElroy's possession not two minutes before in the change from the jig-saw puzzle she had bought. It would do for the day's gift to ten-year-old Bobby.

Every afternoon, unless extreme weather interfered, Thomas, the McElroy chauffeur for twenty years, took Mrs. Anthony McElroy, senior, on a shopping expedition from the house where she lived with her son and her grandson. On this expedition she did such small errands as the various busy members of the family needed. And always, at the end of the trip, there was one final errand, some knick-knack for Bobby, her great-grandson.

Thomas fidgeted slightly. "Quite sure you're finished, Mrs. McElroy?" he questioned.

"Yes, thank you, Thomas. Oh—you're thinking of Bobby! Yes, I've an Indian head penny for him. He's collecting coins, you know."

Thomas chuckled. "Yes'm. And stamps and cellophane and old pipes and—"

Mrs. McElroy went on: "Yes. And specially Indian head pennies. He wants to make a fortune with them. He's heard they're worth more than a cent now and he's trying to corner the market so that when they go up he can sell them."

Thomas, relieved, let the car out a bit and Mrs. McElroy turned the penny over in her fingers and looked at the date. An old one, 1866. She closed her eyes.

She had been—let's see, ten years old, in 1866. On a June day in that year she had found a penny, too. She remembered that she and John Martin had been walking home together from school. How the city had changed since then! There had been country lanes where there were city pavements now. And where she had lived, up near Fifty-ninth streets, there had been a little pond that all the children loved. Choked under cement, now, of course, the springs and streams that fed it. She and John had loitered in the shade at the side of the pond on their way home.

"I wish we had some candy," John had said.

"Would you divide?" she had asked.

"I'd give you more than half," John had said.

"Would you, John? Oh, thank you. Oh, look! Some money!"

And there in the grass at their feet she had spied a penny—bright and new and shining. "Look, John. We'll go buy some candy. You carry the money."

So John had taken charge of their find. "It's our special penny," he had said. "I'll mark it for ours." And then they had sat on the grass while he scraped away with his knife at the edge of the penny to mark it for their own.

"It's brand new," he had said. "Look—it has this year's date!"

"Laura," John had bragged, "I'm going to be rich some day when I grow up. I'm going to have piles and piles of money. And I'm going to marry you and give you half of it. And we'll have candy each day."

John Martin—well, he'd been right. He'd laid the foundation of the great fortune that his grandsons were working so hard to hold together today. She turned over the worn old coin in her fingers. Her nail caught in a worn ridge at its edge. She opened her eyes and looked, with a little breathless start of interest. There it was—the deep ridge, right at the point of the Indian's nose, worn smooth and even.

This was the same coin.

John hadn't forgotten. He had gone West to win his wealth. He had asked her to wait for him and she had half promised. But then Anthony McElroy—poor, then, too, though he did well enough later on—had come along and she had forgotten John and her half promise. And when he had come back from the West with a small fortune already his, he had found her promised to Tony.

But there was that coin in her hand, a part of John's struggle. The very same coin.

"Thomas," Mrs. McElroy said to the chauffeur. "Perhaps you'd better not go home yet. Go back to Winships' and I'll buy Bobby that new stamp album he wants. I'll keep this old penny."

Coin Sells for $2,000

Numismatists flocked to a rare coin sale held in Paris at the Hotel Drouot recently, where $2,080 was paid for a tetradrachma struck at Amphipolis (Macedonia), and $900 went for a silver decadrachma struck at Syracuse. In 1878, only $56 was paid for the coin sold here for $2,000. Other rare coins sold for from $300 to $344, and the entire sale netted the auction house a sum of 241,000 francs, or $9,640.

It will be noted that practically all are given some task to perform; only 24 were idle and they were either sick, under discipline, or new men. Not only do they operate two farms, but do all the institutional and construction work and are employed in the industries.

The new Industrial Building is now occupied in part. The basement is used for the storage of both materials and finished products of the shops. The first floor is to be the forge shop; this industry has not yet been moved from the old building; after it is transferred the present forge shop will be used as a blacksmith shop in connection with the maintenance of the institution. The south end of the second floor is used as a machine shop and for the manufacture of aluminum ware; in the north end galvanized ironware is turned out; in connection with this industry is a class of ten inmates in drafting who are taught to draw and then fabricate the metal articles in accordance with the drawings.

The third floor south houses the shop where baskets, brooms, toweling and bed springs are made. The north end of this floor is the cabinet shop.

All the machinery in the shops in this building is supposed to be operated by individual motors. No new woodworking machinery has been installed, the old being still in use. The purchase of the new machinery is being held up by the Bureau of Purchase with the idea that the old machinery should be utilized. From information obtained, this would be neither practicable nor economical. The new building is intended for motor driven machinery only, and the old machinery is not only worn out but it would be almost impossible to operate it by individual motors; it is twenty-five years old. The industries manufacture aluminum ware, metal signs, sheet metal work, iron chairs, chains, brooms and baskets, and repair shoes.

All the clothing for the inmates, except winter underwear which is purchased from Sing Sing prison, is made at the institution, as are the shoes, both work and outgoing, as well as the "cell slippers". The "slippers" are a low canvas shoe made from gun covers, purchased for a negligible price from the federal government. Three new power machines have been placed for the manufacture of socks. A new inmate uniform coat has been adopted; it has lapels instead of buttoning up to the throat. Every inmate is furnished with a whisk broom, made in the institution. Rugs are woven on hand looms, for use in the cells and rooms of the inmates.

Most of the institutional printing is done in the Print Shop, which is located on the second floor of the Laundry Building. A new printing press is needed. Approximately four hundred copies of an institutional paper is now published for the inmates.

The class in Sign Painting and the School of Letters are also on the second floor of the Laundry Building. The painting class appears to be doing excellent work.

The laundry equipment was in good condition and is ample for the needs of the institution. The laundry work for Wallkill Prison is being done here, which additional work has taxed the capacity of the plant, but Wallkill is almost ready to take over its own work.

The library has been improved and is in good condition.

There are two farms—one surrounding the institution, and the "Colony Farm" which is located about three and one-half miles from the main group of buildings. The institution farm is used mainly for gardening and quantities of vegetables are produced for canning in addition to supplying the institution during the season; one field contained 17,000 tomato plants. The "Colony Farm" is the dairy farm and a herd of registered Holstein cattle is maintained. This herd led those of all state institution farms during January, February and March and was second in April and May of this year. The cattle are in very fine condition and show excellent care. The farm buildings are in good repair and both exterior and interior present a good appearance. The water supply for the Colony Farm is from a small reservoir on the hills west of the farm buildings. It is planned to dig a well on the flat, a short distance south of the cow stables, to supplement the present water supply. An appropriation should be made to build a concrete tank of 50,000 gallon capacity, to store water for fire protection.

At the Institution Farm the flock of hens led all state institutions in egg production during the months of March, April and May, 1933. The piggery and hennery are on the Institution Farm; both of these buildings are a disgrace to the state and are unfit for use. The report of inspection made three years ago recommended that they be replaced, but no funds have been made available; at that time it was estimated that a new piggery could be constructed for $3,000 and a hennery for $1,000. The raising of swine and poultry, it was stated, has been profitable here. A new orchard has been set out on the old sewer bed. Additional land is to be added to the Institution Farm as soon as certain formalities are complied with, as the necessary funds are available. At the time of inspection 50 inmates were employed on the farm and this number is sometimes increased to sixty.

Military training was inaugurated here in 1926 and the battalion has made most gratifying progress. It now compares favorably with those in penal institutions which have had a reputation for excellence in drill. The inmates are given setting-up exercises twenty minutes before breakfast. The military training has aided materially in administering the institution and is of physical benefit to the inmates. A very fine evening parade was given by the inmate band and battalion on the afternoon of June 2nd. Both the officer in command, who is military instructor, and the officer in charge of the band, are to be commended for the results obtained with the material available.

The mess hall is equipped with tables seating eight inmates. Heavy chairs manufactured in the institution are used. The menus for the two ten-day periods ending June 12 are attached to this report for filing; they show that the meals are varied and the rations well balanced. Several meals were observed and the portions served were ample. Milk is served from the dairy and large quantities of fresh vegetables are used in season as well as canned vegetables, both being products of the farm. Aluminum ware, manufactured in the institution, is used and the food is placed on the tables while the inmates are marching in.

It was stated the kitchen equipment was satisfactory.

The quality of the bread produced is excellent. Larger ovens are needed.

Inmates are still permitted to purchase certain groceries, toilet articles, candy, cigars, cigarettes and tobacco. The articles are listed and must be purchased as listed. Purchases are made once a month and cannot exceed five dollars in value. They are also permitted to receive packages of food from relatives on Easter, Fourth of July, Thanksgiving and Christmas. They may also receive white or gray shirts and blue or gray sweater. When articles of clothing are received in this way they are marked with the inmate's number.

One of the needs of this institution is the construction of additional housing facilities for officers. Most of the employes live at some distance from the institution and it would be difficult to assemble even a reasonable number in an emergency during the hours when the force on duty is at its minimum.

The two main gates to the institution were installed two years ago. It was intended that they be operated by electric motor power. The design was poor and it has been necessary to open and close them by hand. The contractor who built them failed. Stronger construction is necessary and an additional appropriation will be required for alterations if the gates are to be operated in the manner originally intended.

At present, a guard is detailed to supervise the sewage disposal plant. A man to operate the plant properly could be secured for about half the salary paid a trained officer. This should be cared for when the budget for the coming years is made up.

The acting superintendent devotes considerable time to interviews with inmates. To be able to talk with the head of the institution often causes a discontented inmate to return to his quarters satisfied, or at least gratified that he has been able to present his views. The results of this policy have been found to be beneficial.

Every effort is made to keep this institution in the highest sanitary condition. There are no odors and it is free from vermin. Blankets are washed at frequent intervals and are taken into the yard and aired every Saturday when the weather permits.

Conditions here are excellent. The discipline is of the best. The institution has never been in better condition. The acting superintendent and his staff are deserving of commendation and are to be congratulated upon the manner in which it is maintained.

Respectfully submitted,
JOHN F. TREMAIN,
Secretary.
PHILIP G. ROOSA,
Assistant Secretary.

Schryvers Annex Fourth Straight Win, Defeat Gardeners, 3-2

Schryver's Lumbermen strengthened their hold on first place in the second half of the City League at the Athletic Field Wednesday evening by nosing out the Crystal Gardeners by a score of 3-2. The game was the last one of the first round of the second half. As yet the Lumbermen haven't lost a game in this half. They have been tied once.

Big Ed Wilson of the Lumbermen and Bob Smith of the Gardeners, both speedball artists, booked up in this contest and neither one would have been scored on if errors hadn't been committed. Hits were scarce, only seven being made, but the Lumbermen made their three hits count, while the Gardeners wasted four.

Wilson was in trouble often, but always managed to pull out somehow. The four hits he allowed came in pairs, not one of them counting in the scoring.

After the first inning, when the Lumbermen scored all their runs, Smith was the master. Only one runner got on the bases and he was doubled at second base.

The Gardeners had plenty of opportunities of scoring. In the first inning they had the bases loaded but were able to shove only one run across home plate. Moore and Thomas reached first base on errors by Slover, to open the game. Dawkins flied out to Jansen and Joyce was walked. Cragan hit to Slover, who forced Moore at home. Robins tried for a double play at first, but threw low and allowed Thomas to score.

The Lumbermen retaliated in their half by scoring all their runs. Petersen drew a pass. Niles bunted and Johnson erred on it. "Coke" Tiano was tossed out at first and McGuire fanned. But Jack Robins poled double to right field and Petersen and Niles dented the rubber. "Dutch" Glaser drove Robins home with what later proved to be the winning marker. The Gardeners other run came in the fourth inning. After two outs Smith was walked and reached third base when Petersen erred on Moore's grounder. Moore and Smith then executed a double steal to score Smith.

SIDELINERS

Jack Robins not only was a big help in receiving Wilson's slants, but proved a great help on the offensive. He drove in two runs and scored the winning one himself.

Norm Niles also came in handy in the fifth inning. He speared a liner off Paul Joyce's bat and doubled Dawkins off second after the latter had doubled.

Bob McGuire saved Wilson a lot of trouble in the fourth inning. He went away back to the cars in left field to grab Thomas' long fly.

Tagging Major League Bases

New York's two league leading ball clubs, the Giants and the Yankees, both are having real battles on their hands but in yesterday's round at least they were of entirely different varieties.

While the Yanks were being shoved back into a tie with Washington's Senators through the medium of an 8-4 defeat at the hands of the Chicago White Sox while the Senators were nosing out the St. Louis Browns, 8-7, the Giants very nearly went into fisticuffs with the Pittsburgh Pirates.

A disputed decision in the fourth inning of the opener, when even the umpires failed to agree, caused an argument that just stopped short of a riot and delayed the game 15 minutes. The question was whether Freddy Lindstrom had caught Fred Fitzsimmons' liner or not. Umpire Barr first ruled it an out, then after a consultation with Moran, at third, decided it was a hit and Gus Mancusco had scored the first run of the game.

Both teams joined in the dispute and the police were kept busy for a while restraining the throng of 22,000. When things calmed down, the Bucs went on to bunch their hits behind Larry French's fine hurling and win 4-1. The Giants opened up early in the second clash, scored four runs in the first frame and won 7-3 when Carl Hubbell pitched great relief ball after Watson Clark had been thumped off the slab in the first inning.

The Yankees' troubles all came in the seventh inning as the pale hose got started after Babe Ruth muffed an easy fly and walloped Walter Brown and Wilcy Moore for seven runs. The defeat ended the Yanks' nine-game winning streak.

St. Louis, under the guidance of Al Sothoron after Bill Killefer's resignation as manager yesterday morning, came from behind to tie the score against Washington but succumbed to a three-hit, two run rally in the eighth.

The Cleveland Indians had to go 13 innings to beat Boston's Red Sox 8-7, scoring the winning run on an error by Bob Seeds at first base. But the victory left them only a half game away from fifth place as Detroit split a double-header with the Philadelphia Athletics. The A's won the opener 7-3 with a five-run outburst in the third inning, then the Tigers hammered out 18 hits and a 10-5 victory in the second clash.

The humble Cincinnati Reds shoved Brooklyn into seventh place in the National League by edging out a 6 to 5 victory. The defeat put the Dodgers a point behind the Phillies, who, with the St. Louis, Boston and Chicago Nationals, had an open date.

SPORT SLANTS

By ALAN J. GOULD

(Associated Press Sports Editor.)

Among other things who would have figured:

That July would find the highly touted Pirate outfield of Waner, Lindstrom and Waner hitting for a combined batting average of a few points over .260, while the Phillies boasted of a trio of Klein, Schulmerich and Fullis clouting the old horsehide for .350 or better, the greatest offensive by any outer trio in either major league.

That not even such terrific thumping as this could keep the self-same Phils out of the National League cellar, whereas they figured to be a real pennant contender.

That New York would be leading the league by five games on July 4, that ancient barometric date on the baseball calendar, but that it would be the Giants and not the Yankees. The Yanks were trailing Washington by 2½ games at the same time.

That the afore-mentioned Giants would be getting as good or better pitching from Hubbell, Fitzsimmons, Schumacher and Parmelee than the widely-advertised Cardinal staff would be getting from Hallahan, Dean, Carleton and Walker.

And that both Boston clubs would win double-headers on the same day (July 4) from such teams as the Giants and Athletics?????

For What It's Worth

Speaking of the standing of the clubs at the critical milestone of the race, July 4, our energetic Mr. Paul Mickelson of Chicago dives into a bushel of figures and comes up with the following interesting conclusions:

1. The leader through July 4 in the American League for the past five years won the flag.

2. The leader through July 4 in the National League for the past five years won the pennant twice, lost it three times. St. Louis made up the most ground in 1930, jumping from fourth place on Independence Day to first place at the finish. Pittsburgh in 1929 and 1932, and Chicago in 1930 were on top on July 4 but landed second in the final standing.

Giants "Safe"

3. From 1928 through 1930, the one-two clubs in the American League stayed that way from July 4 to the finish. The greatest shake-up in the American was last year, outside of first place which was occupied by the Yankees all the way.

4. A leader with 50 games won on July 4 looks "in" in the American League; in the National, the leader with as many as 44 in the games won column is generally safe.

P. S. On July 4, the Senators had won 47 games, the Giants 44.

Aces Blank Dodgers, 9 to 0.

The Aces shut out the Dodgers, by a 9-0 score, at the Athletic Field Wednesday afternoon. Snyder did the pitching for the Aces, Hornbeck and Kettle being on the receiving end.

Average Jones and the MERCY SIGN

Mercy

By Samuel Hopkins Adams

Mr. A. V. R. ff. Jones—Average Jones, his friends called him—was tired of spending his dead uncle's millions in New York and doing nothing more, and craved to take part in the dynamic activities of life. At the suggestion of the owner of an important and decent newspaper, he opened offices in Astor court and went in for following up queer advertisements and tracing down fraudulent advertisers.

"Want a job, Average?"

Bertram reached over and prodded his friend severely in the ribs. "Listen, I cut this out of yesterday's Evening Register. With your kind attention, ladies and gentlemen—" He read:

WANTED—A YOUNG MAN, UNATtached, competent to act as assistant in outdoor scientific work. Manual skill as desirable as experience. Emolument for one months' work generous. Man without family insisted upon. Apply after 5:30 p. m. in proper person. Smith, 74 Bellair Street.

Slowly whirling in his chair, Average Jones received the clipping, read it and yawned.

"Is that all?" said the indignant Bertram. "Doesn't that inspire any notion above a yawn in your palsied processes of mind?"

Average Jones laughed. "There isn't any Smith," he said.

"Well, it's nothing to me what his name is. Only I thought you might be the aspiring young scientist he was yearning for."

"Wouldn't wonder if I were, thank you. Let's see. Bellair street? Where's the directory? Thanks. Yes, it is Greenwich village. Well, I think I'll just stroll down that way and have a look after dinner."

Thus it was that Mr. Adrian Van Reypen Egerton Jones found himself on a hot May evening pursuing the Adventure of Life into the vestibule of a rather dingy old house which had once been the abode of solemn prosperity if not actual aristocracy in the olden days of New York city. Almost immediately the telegraphic click of the lock apprised him that he might enter, and as he stepped into the hallway the door of the right-hand ground-floor apartment opened to him.

"You will please come in," said a voice.

The tone was gentle and measured. Also it was, by its accent, alien to any rightful Smith. The visitor stepped into a passageway which was dim—until he entered it and the door swung behind him. Then it became pitch black.

"You will pardon this," said the voice. "A severe affection of the eyes compels me. You will find matches at your elbow," said the voice, coming dulled, from a further apartment.

"Thank you," returned Average Jones, enormously entertained by the dime-novel setting which his host had provided for him.

He lighted the gas and looked about a sparsely furnished room without a single distinguishing feature, unless a high and odd-shaped traveling bag which stood on a chair near by could be so regarded. The voice interrupted his survey.

"You have come in answer to my advertisement?"

"Yes, sir."

"Can you endure exposure? Subsisting on rough fare and sleeping as you may?"

"I have camped in the northern forests."

"Yes," mused the voice. "You look hardy."

Average Jones arose. "You—er—are spying upon me, then," he drawled quietly. "I might have—er—suspected a peep-hole."

He advanced slowly toward the door whence the voice came. A chair blocked his way. Without lowering his gaze he shoved at the obstacle with his foot.

"Have a care!" warned the voice.

The chair toppled and overturned. From it fell, with a light shock, the strange valise, which, striking the floor, flew open, disclosing a small cardboard cabinet. Across the front of the cabinet was a strip of white paper labeled in handwriting, each letter being individual, with what looked to the young man like the word "MERCY." He stooped to replace the bag.

"Do not touch it," ordered the voice peremptorily.

Average Jones straightened up to face the door again.

"It isn't full of dynamite, is it?"

"What is your branch of scientific work?" counter-questioned the other.

"Botany," replied the young man, at random.

"No other? Physics? Entomology? Astronomy? Chemistry? Biology?"

The applicant shook his head in repeated negation. "None that I've specialized on."

"Ah! I fear you will not suit my purpose. Since I cannot employ you, I owe you every courtesy for having got you to this trouble. You will observe that I am not very presentable."

The side door swung open. In the dimness of the half-closed apartment Average Jones saw a man huddled in a chair. He wore a black skull cap. So far as identification went he was safe. His whole face was grotesquely blotched and swollen. So, also, were the hands which rested on his knees.

"Be at peace," he said. "It is not contagious. You can find your way out? I bid you good evening, sir."

"Now I wonder," mused Average Jones, as he jolted on the rear platform of an Eighth avenue car, "by what lead I could have landed that job. I rather think I've missed something."

All that night, and recurrently on many nights thereafter, the poisoned and contorted face and the scrawled "MERCY" on the cabinet lurked troublously in his mind. A few days later he made his way to the Cosmic club one afternoon. There, as he had foreseen, he found Robert Bertram.

"Can I detach you from your usual bridge game this evening?" he demanded of that languid gentleman.

"Very possibly. What's the inducement?"

"Chapter Second of the Bellair street advertisement. I've told you the first chapter. You've been the god-outside-the-machine so far. Now, come on in."

Together they went to the Greenwich village house. The name "Smith" had disappeared from the vestibule.

The landlord turned out to be a German landlady, who knew little concerning her late ground-floor tenant and evinced no interest in the subject. The "perfessor," as she termed "Smith," had left no address. Mrs. Marron in the other ground-floor flat had tried to be acquainted with him. Not much luck, she thought.

Mrs. Marron was voluble, ignorant, and a willing source of information.

"The perfessor? Sure! I knew'm. 'Twas me give'm the name. He was a Mojum. A big one; one of the kind it comes to, nacheral. Spirit-rappin's! Somethin' fierce! My kitchen window is on the airshaft. So's his. Many's the time in the still evenin's I've heard the rap-rap-rappin' on his window an' on the wall, but mostly on the window. Blip! out of the dark. It'd make you just hop! And him sittin' quiet and peaceful in the front room all the time. And once I seen him with his materializin' wand, sittin' in the room almost dark."

"His what?"

"Materializin' wand. Spirit-rod, you know. As tall as himself and all shiny and slick. It was slim and sort o' knobby like this wood—what's the name of it, now?—they make fish poles out of. Only the real big bugs in spiritualism use 'em. They're dangerous. You wouldn't catch me touchin' it or goin' in there even now. I says to Mrs. Kraus, I says—"

And so the stream of high-pitched, eager talk flowed until the two men escaped from it into the vacant apartment. Going to the kitchen through doors on a straight line with the front room, Average Jones inspected the window. The glass was thickly marked with faint, bluish blurs, being indeed, almost opaque from them in the middle of the upper pane. Below the window was a considerable amount of crumbled putty, which he fingered with puzzled curiosity.

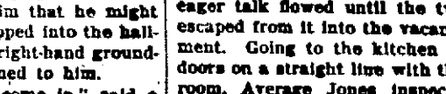
In the front room a mass of papers had been half burned. Some of them were local journals, mostly the Evening Register. A few were publications in the Arabic text.

"Oriental newspapers," remarked Bertram.

Average Jones picked them up and began to fold them. From between two sheets fluttered a very small bit of paper, narrow and half curled, as if from the drying of mucilage. He lifted and read it.

"Here we are again, Bert," he remarked in his most casual tone. "The quality of this Mercy is strained, all right."

The two men bent over the slip, studying it. The word was, as Average Jones had said, in a strained, effortful handwriting, and each letter stood distinct. These were the characters:



"Is it mathematical, do you think, possibly?" asked Average Jones.

"All alone by itself like that? Rather not! More like a label, if you ask me."

"The little sister of the label on the cabinet, then."

"Cherchez la femme," observed Bertram.

"Oh, let's get out of here," said Average Jones. "I'm getting dizzy with it all. The next step," he observed, as they walked slowly up the street, "is by train, to the place where the fake 'Smith' has been doing little stunts. We've got to find a place which is near a stretch of deserted, swampy ground, very badly infested with mosquitoes. There must have been a lot of 'sheesters' to do the kind of job that 'Smith's' face showed."

"Average," said Bertram solemnly, "there are times when I conceive a sort of respect for your commonplace and plodding intellect. There's a station on the Short line, Pearlington by name, that's in the mathematical center of the ghastliest marsh anywhere between here and somewhereabouts. I think that's our little sequence resort, and I'm yours for the nine a. m. train tomorrow."

At Pearlington a lonely official readily identified Smith.

"I guess I know your friend, all right. The dago was tall and thin and had white hair; almost snow white. Sort of bogologist, or something, wasn't he?"

"Have you any idea where we could find his camp?"

The railroad man laughed.

"Fine chance you got of finding anything in that swamp. It's my notion he must have had a houseboat."

On the following day they located the houseboat. It was deserted. Within its single room was afternoon confusion, testifying to the simplest kind of housekeeping sharply terminated. Attempt had been made to burn the boat. In a heap of rubbish, where the fire had apparently started, Average Jones found, first, a Washington newspaper, which he pocketed; next, with a swelling heart, the wreck of the pasteboard cabinet, but no sign of the strange valise which had held it. The "Mercy" sign was gone from the cabinet, its place being supplied by a placard, larger, in a different handwriting, and startlingly more specific:

"Danger! If Found Destroy at Once. Do Not Touch With Bare Hands."

There was nothing else. Gingerly, Average Jones detached the sign. The cabinet proved to be empty. He pushed a rock into it, lifted it on the end of a stick and dropped it overboard. One after another eight little fishes glinted up through the water, turned their white bellies to the sunlight and bobbed, motionless.

Some days after the recovery of the houseboat, Average Jones sat at breakfast, according to his custom, in the cafe of the Hotel Palatia. In the issue of the Washington daily, culled from the houseboat, there was no marked passage to show any reason for its having been in the possession of "Smith." Average Jones had studied and restudied the columns, until he knew them almost by heart. During the period of waiting for his order to be brought he was brooding over the problem, when he felt a hand-pressure on his shoulder and turned to confront Mr. Thomas Colvin McIntyre, fifth assistant secretary of state of the United States of America.

"Hello! What have you been up to that's scandalous?"

"It isn't me," replied the diplomat ungrammatically. "It's Telfik Bey."

"That's what I'm here to get at. My instructions are to find out secretly, if at all, for reasons which—are not being for the public, I need not detail to you."

"You need not, in point of fact, tell me anything about it at all," observed Average Jones equably.

Pomposity fell away from Mr. Thomas Colvin McIntyre, leaving him palpably shivering.

"At any rate I can trust you," he said. "Telfik Bey is not a merchant. He is a secret, confidential agent of the Turkish government. He came over to New York from Washington in spite of warnings that he would be killed. Come up with me and look the place over, Average. Let me send for the manager."

That functionary came, a vision of perturbation in a pale-gray coat. Upon assurance that Average Jones was "safe" he led the way to the rooms so hastily vacated by the spirit of the Turkish guest.

"If I could have known," observed the manager morosely, "when the Turkish embassy reserved the apartment—"

"The Turkish embassy never reserved any apartment for Telfik Bey," put in the fifth assistant secretary of state.

"Surely you are mistaken, sir," replied the hotel man. "I saw their emissary myself. He specified for rooms on the south side, either the third or fourth floor. Wouldn't have anything else."

"You gave him a definite reservation?" asked Jones.

"Yes; 335 and 336."

"Has the man been here since?"

"Not to my knowledge."

"Anything about him strike you particularly?"

"Well, he was tall and thin and looked sickly. He talked very soft, too, like a sick man."

The characterization of the Pearlington station agent recurred to the interrogator's mind. "Had he—er—white hair?" he half yawned.

"No," replied the manager.

Average Jones turned to the budding diplomat. "To what other hotels would the Turkish embassy be likely to send its men?"

"Sometimes their charge de'affaires goes to the Nederstrom."

"Go up there and find out whether a room has been reserved for Telfik Bey, and if so, by whom."

Nos. 335 and 336, which the manager opened, proved to consist of a small sitting room, a bedroom and a bath, each with a large window giving on the cross street, well back from Fifth avenue.

"Here's where he was found." The manager indicated a spot near the wall of the sitting room and opposite the window. "He had just pushed the button when he fell. Bronson, the bellboy on that call, answered. He knocked several times and got no answer. Then he opened the door and saw Mr. Telfik down, all in a heap."

"What—er—about the—er—shot?"

The manager looked startled. "Well, Bronson says that just as he opened the door he saw a bullet cross the room and strike the wall above the body."

"You can't see a bullet in flight."

"He saw this one," insisted the manager. "As soon as it struck it exploded. Three other people heard it. Bronson ran out and fell, in a sort of fainting fit. He came to long enough to tell his story. Then he got terribly nauseated and went off again."

"Had anyone else been in the room or past it within a few minutes?"

"Absolutely no one. The floor girl must have seen anyone going in. She heard the shot. And a minute or two before, she heard and felt a jar from the room."

"Corroborative of the man having fallen before the shot," commented Jones.

"When I got here, five minutes later, he was quite dead," continued the manager.

Evidence of the explosion was slight to the investigating eye of Average Jones. The wall showed an abrasion, but, as the investigator expected, no bullet hole. Against the leg of a desk he found a small metal shell, which he laid on the table.

"There's your bullet," he observed with a smile.

"It's a cartridge, anyway," cried the hotel man. "He must have been shot, after all."

"From inside the room? Hardly! And certainly not with that. It's a very small fulminate of mercury shell, and never held lead. No. The man was down, if not dead, before that went off."

Average Jones was now at the window. Taking a piece of paper from his pocket he brushed the contents of the window sill upon it. A dozen dead flies rolled upon the paper. He examined them thoughtfully, cast them aside and turned back to the manager.

"Impossible," said the manager.

Here Mr. Thomas Colvin McIntyre arrived with a flushed face.

"You are right, Average," he said. "The same man had reserved rooms at the Nederstrom for Telfik Bey."

"What's the location?"

"Tenth floor; north side. He had insisted on both details. Nos. 1015, 1017."

"Um-m-m. What across the street?"

"How should I know? You didn't tell me to ask."

"It's the Glenargan office building, just opened, Mr. Jones," volunteered the manager.

Average Jones turned again to the window, closed it and fastened his handkerchief in the catch. "Leave that there," he directed the manager. "Don't let anyone into this room. I'm off."

Stopping to telephone, Average Jones ascertained that there were no vacant offices on the tenth floor, south side of the Glenargan apartment building, facing the Nederstrom hotel. The last one had been let two weeks before to—this he ascertained by judicious questioning—a dark, foreign gentleman who was an expert on rugs. Well satisfied, the investigator crossed over to the skyscraper across from the Palatia.

He entered the office. In it were only a desk, two chairs and a scrap basket. The basket was crammed with newspapers. One of them was the Hotel Register. Average Jones found Telfik Bey's name, as he had expected, in its roster. The newspapers, mainly copies of the Evening Register, seemed to contain, upon cursory examination, nothing germane to the issue. But, scattered among them, the searcher found a number of fibrous chips. They were short and thick; such chips as might be made by cutting a bamboo pole into cross lengths, convenient for carrying.

Next, he turned his attention to the desk. It was bare, except for a few scraps of paper and some writing implements. But in a crevice there shone a glimmer of glass. With a careful finger nail Average Jones pushed out a small phial. It had evidently been sealed with lead. Nothing was in it. Its discoverer leaned back and contemplated it with stiffened eyelids. For, upon its tiny, improvised label was scrawled the "Mercy sign"; mysterious before, now all but incredible.

For several minutes Average Jones sat bemused. When, only a moment before five, the Ad-Visor entered his office Bertram, who was waiting with McIntyre, held out a newspaper to him.

"Cast your eye on that," said he. "The Register fairly reeks with freaks lately."

Average Jones read aloud.

SMITH-PERKINS, FORMERLY 74 BELlaire—Send me present location. Turkish Triumph about smoked out. Mercy—Box 34, Office.

"It's my work," observed Average Jones blandly.

The visitors stared at him in silence.

"Rather a forlorn hope, but sometimes a bluff will go," he continued.

"Are you so infantile as to suppose that this murderer will give information about himself?" demanded McIntyre.

Average Jones smiled, drew a letter from his pocket. "The advertisement worked to a charm. Mr. Smith gives his address in this, and intimates that I may call upon him."

Young Mr. McIntyre rose.

"You're going to see him, then?"

"At once."

"Think there'll be excitement?" asked Bertram languidly. "I'd like to go along."

Across town and far up the East side whizzed the car, over the bridge that leads away from Manhattan island to the north, and through quiet streets as little known to the average New Yorker as are Hongkong and Caracas. In front of a frame house it stopped. On a side porch, over which bright roses swarmed like children clambering into a hospital lap, sat a man with a gray face. He was tall and slender, and his hair, a dingy black, was already showing worn streaks where the color had faded. At Average Jones he gazed with unconcealed surprise.

"Ah; it is you!" he exclaimed. "You," he smiled, "are the 'Mercy' of the advertisement? You will come in?"

Average Jones examined a nodding rose with an indulgent, almost a paternal, expression.

"If you—er—think it—er—safe," he murmured.

"Assuredly."

As if enacting a pledge the young man held out his hand. The older one unhesitatingly grasped it.

"And you, Mr. Jones; are you a detective?"

"No; merely a follower of strange trails—by taste."

"Ah. You have set yourself to a dark one. You wish to know how Telfik Bey"—his eyes narrowed and glinted—"came to his reward. Will you enter, gentlemen?"

"I know this much," replied Average Jones as, followed by his friends, he passed through the door which their host held open. "You prepared, in the luxurious part of the Hackensack meadows, some kind of poison which, I believe, can be made with safety only in the open air. You found that your man was coming to New York. Knowing that he would probably put up at the Palatia or the Nederstrom, you reserved rooms for him at both, and took an office across from each. As it was hot weather, you calculated upon his windows being open. You watched for him. When he came you struck him down in his own room with the poison."

"But how?" It was the diplomat who interrupted.

"I think with a long blow-gun."

"By George!" said Bertram softly. "So the spirit-wand of bamboo was a blow-gun!"

"The fumes, whatever they were, killed swiftly?"

"They did. Instantly; mercifully. Too mercifully."

"How could you know it was fumes?" demanded Mr. Thomas Colvin McIntyre.

"By the dead flies, the effect upon the bellboy, and the fact that no wound was found on the body. Then, too, there was the fulminate of mercury shell. I think the shell was blown through the blowpipe to clear the deadly fumes from the room by its explosion, before any one else should suffer. Mr. Smith is, at least, not a wanton slaughterer."

"You are right, sir, and I thank you," said the foreigner. He drew himself up weakly but with pride. "Gentlemen, I am not a murderer. I am an avenger. It would have gone hard with my conscience had any innocent person met death through me. As for that Turkish dog, you shall judge for yourself whether he did not die too easily."

From among the papers in a tiroir against the wall he took a French journal, and read, translating fluently. The article was a bald account of the torture, outrage and massacre of Armenian women and girls, at Adana, by the Turks. The most hideous portion of it was briefly descriptive of the atrocities perpetrated by order of a high Turkish official upon a mother and two young daughters. "An Armenian prisoner, being dragged by in chains, went mad at the sight," the correspondent stated.

"I was that prisoner," said the reader. "The official was Telfik Bey. I saw my naked daughter break from the soldiers and run to him, pleading for pity, as he sat on his horse; and I saw him strike his spur into her bare breast. My wife, the mother of my children—"

"Don't!" The protest came from the fifth assistant secretary of state.

"But what was the poison?" asked Bertram.

"I think Mr. Jones has more than a suspicion," replied the doomed man, with a smile. "You will find useful references on yonder shelf, Mr. Jones."

Moving across the shelf, Average Jones took down a heavy volume and ran quickly over the leaves.

"Ah!" he said presently, and not noticing, in his absorption, that the host had crossed again to the tiroir and was quietly searching in a compartment, he read aloud:

Little is known of cyanide of cacodyl, in its action the swiftest and most deadly of existing poisons. In the '90s Bunsen, the German chemist, combined oxide of cacodyl with cyanogen, a radical of prussic acid, producing cyanide of cacodyl, or dimethyl arsine cyanide. As both of its components are of the deadliest description, it is extremely dangerous to make. It can be made only in the open air, and not without the most extreme precaution known to science. Mr. Lacelles Scott of England nearly lost his life experimenting with it in 1901. A small fraction of a grain gives off vapor sufficient to kill a human being instantly.

"This is all very well," broke in Mr. Assistant Secretary Thomas Colvin McIntyre, "but I want this man arrested. How can we know that he isn't shamming and may not escape us, after all?"

"By this," retorted their host. He held aloft a small glass vial, lead sealed, and staggered weakly to the door.

"Stop him!" said Average Jones sharply.

The door closed on the words. There was a heavy fall without, followed by the light tinkle of glass.

Average Jones, who had half crossed the room in a leap, turned to his friends, warning them back.

They stood, the four men, rigid. Presently Average Jones, opening a rear window, leaped to the ground, followed by the others, and came around the corner of the porch. The dead man lay with a peaceful face. Average Jones uncovered.

"God forgive him," he said. "Who shall say that he was not right?"

Returning to the porch again, he cleared away the fragments of glass, aided by Bertram. To one of these clung a shred of paper. For all his languid self-control the club dilettante shivered a little as he thrust at it with a stick.

"Look, Average; it's the 'Mercy' sign again. What a hideous travesty!"

Average Jones shook his head.

"It isn't 'Mercy,' Bert. It's the label that he attached, for precaution, to everything that had to do with his deadly stuff. The formula for cyanide of cacodyl is 'Hy-Say.' It was the sweetly bewitching thing misled; that's all."

"The Spirit-Wand of Bamboo Was a Blow-Gun."

"Telfik Bey? Wait a minute. Let me think." The name came to him as vizualized print in small headlines, reproduced to the mind's eye from the Washington newspaper which he had so exhaustively studied.

THIS TURK A QUICK JUMPER

Telfik Bey, Guest of Turkish Embassy, Barely Escapes a Speeding Motor-Car.

"Who is Telfik Bey?" he inquired.

"He isn't. Up to yesterday he was a guest of this hotel."

The tone was significant. Average Jones' good-natured face became grave.

"Oh, I beg your pardon, Tommy. What he a friend of yours?"

"No. He was, in a sense, a ward of the department, over here on invitation. This is what has almost driven me crazy."

Fumbling nervously in the pocket of his creaseless white waistcoat he brought forth a death notice.

"From the Dial," he said, handing it to Average Jones.

The clipping looked conventional enough:

DIED—JULY 21, SUDDENLY AT THE Hotel Palatia-Telfik Bey of Stamboul, Turkey. Funeral services from the Turkish embassy, Washington, on Tuesday. Ana Alhari.

"If the newspapers ever discover—" The young diplomat stopped short before the enormity of the hypothesis.

"It looks straight enough to me as a death notice, except for the tail. What does 'Ana Alhari' mean? Sort of a requiescat?"

"Yes; like a mice!" said young Mr. McIntyre bitterly. "It means 'Hurrah!' That's the sort of requiescat it is!"

"Ah! Then they got him the second time. The Washington incident, of course, was the first; the attempted murd— that is, the narrow escape of Telfik Bey."

Young Mr. McIntyre looked baffled. "I'm blessed if I know what you're up to, James," he said. "But if you do know anything of this case I need your help. In Washington, where they failed, we foiled the newspapers. Here, where they've succeeded—"

"Who are 'they'?" interrupted Jones.

Maverick Beach Has Two Life Guards

The Maverick Beach and Pool, located on the Maverick road in the heart of the Woodstock Art Colony and presenting all the glamor of that mountain section, has announced that in the future all bathers will be "courteously protected by competent life guards."

The services of Miss Gertrude Hanley, life guard and swimming instructress, were secured early this week. Miss Hanley is a sophomore at New Rochelle College, and she is spending the entire season at Woodstock. She has passed all her college tests in swimming and diving and received "highest honors" in the American Red Cross tests.

Jason Allen will also serve the Maverick Beach as life guard, swimming instructor and diving instructor. He is from West Palm Beach, Fla. He has served as life guard at Manor Beach, Stamford, Conn., diving instructor, Camp Armack, Algonquin Park, Ontario, Canada; won swimming and diving contests at the Water Regatta, Deer Lodge, Montana, (lake in mountains, diving from 40-foot cliff), and is a very good friend of Helen Meany, former Olympic Diving Champion.

Additions for the comfort of patrons are being added daily to the beach, it was announced by Paul Yocan, business manager, who explained that the setting coupled with beach chairs, umbrellas, tropical white sand, and concessions, has added greatly in establishing a very desirable clientele at the beach.

Socialists Denounce Balbo Reception

New York, July 29, (AP).—The Socialist party of New York issued a statement today denouncing the reception accorded General Italo Balbo and his Italian fliers as "an affront to American democracy." "America must not permit justified admiration for magnificence of Balbo's air flight to blind them to the political significance of the visit of 100 Fascist propagandists to this country," the statement said.

The Every Residence At Ashokan Burned

Shokan, July 20—A fire, of undetermined origin, this morning destroyed the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Every at Ashokan, together with the entire contents of the building. Immediately following the discovery of the fire, at 10 o'clock, an alarm was telephoned to the Phoenicia and Woodstock fire companies and the trucks of these units reached the scene shortly after the arrival of the chemical truck of the Shokan Volunteer Fire Association.

The hose of the Phoenicia company was stretched from Lasher's Pond, about an eighth of a mile distant from the burning building, and the blaze was extinguished within a few minutes. Fortunately there was no wind at the time or the adjoining houses probably also would have caught fire. Although the Lasher pond is very low by reason of the drouth, sufficient water was obtained to control the flames and confine them to the ruins of the Every home.

The burned dwelling is located on the mountain road within a few yards from the center of Ashokan village. Both Mr. Every and his wife were absent from home, Mrs. Every being in a Kingston hospital where she recently underwent a serious operation. The house, which had been occupied by the Everys for the past several years, was a frame structure built in waterworks reconstruction days. The adjoining houses, owned by Mrs. Amelia Morris and John Davis, were untouched by the flames due to the prompt work of the firemen together with a number of other men who had responded to the general alarm.

Frank Morris of Kingston, who was in Ashokan at the time of the fire, assisted in protecting his mother's residence, a hundred feet distant from the Every house. Residents of the twin villages who handled the hose line and otherwise played the role of volunteer smoke-eaters included the following men: Lester Lawrence, Earl Kirn, Frank Jones, Herman Wendt, Joseph Reilly, George Von der Osten, Lemuel Ploss and Supervisor Chester A. Lyons of Olive. Members of the reservoir forces emergency fire squad also responded to the alarm and played their usual active part in the exciting doings. Fully a hundred persons gathered at the scene of the fire within a few minutes after State Trooper Mahoney came roaring down the Esopus valley, sounding the siren of his motorcycle. Many motorists passing along Route 28 were attracted to the scene and a large number of cars were parked outside the fire lines during the brief but spectacular blaze.

The last destructive blaze taking place in the village of Ashokan previous to the Every fire was that which destroyed the barn and contents of Supervisor Lyons on the north boulevard, several months ago, the building having since been replaced by an eight-car fireproof garage built of concrete blocks. The promptness displayed by members of the three mountain fire companies in responding to the alarm cannot be too highly commended in this case, where under slightly less favorable conditions a much more serious property loss might have resulted. The distance covered by the Phoenicia and Woodstock trucks is eleven and eight miles respectively, while the Shokan fire house is located near the railroad station in the heart of Ashokan village.

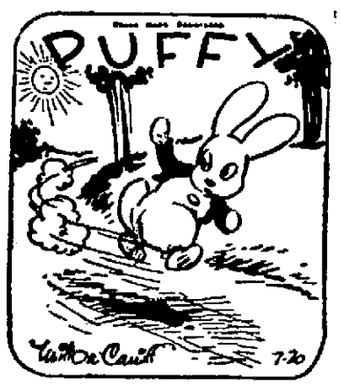
According to the reports of the ticket committee on the clambake sponsored by the Worker's Co-operative Association, the advance sale of tickets promises a large attendance on August 6. Arrangements have been completed by the committee on clambake according to the report given at the regular meeting on Tuesday past and a good menu and plenty of food and an afternoon and evening crammed with fun and entertainment is promised all. Owing to the fact that the executive chairman, ex-mayor Palmer Canfield, was unable to attend the meeting Tuesday because of his attending the Knights of Pythias convention at Saratoga, many important reports of committees were omitted and will be made at a general meeting proposed to be held in the city hall some evening next week. Everyone is urged to attend that meeting as matters of great importance to every worker in the city will be taken up at that time. Every one that is a member of the Subsistence Garden Club of the association is urged to be present, as the secretary, Peter C. Fisher, has several reports and matters of importance to present to such members. The date of the meeting will be announced later this week.



"I've got it!" yells Fluffy. "Hold out if you can!
I've got what I think is a wonderful plan.
I'll run into town and be back in a jiff.
And put a quick end to this stubborn old stiff!"

"They Cast Out Four Anchors.... and Wished for the Day."

But the anchors held! Day came. Not a soul was lost!

The anchors were:

Confidence, Faith, Self-Help, Courage.

These anchors saved Paul. They will save us today. Courage men! The morning cometh.

The fellow one sees running towards the poor house is trying to get an order for something from the superintendent.

Captain (to emigrant on ship)—What are you going to do when you arrive in America?

Emigrant—Oh, take up land.

Captain—Much?

Emigrant—Only a shovelful at a time.

If Europe is determined to get into another war, we are in favor of letting the fighters settle it without any outside help, this time.

Young June Bride—Oh, dear, I don't know what to use to raise my bread. I've tried everything.

Husband (in undertone)—A derrick and a couple of jacks ought to do it.

How to get rich quick: Organize the go-getters of your city into a club. At their first meeting they will all start talking about taking the word "can't" out of the dictionary. Pretty soon someone will denounce Webster for ever putting it in. This is your cue. "Gentlemen," you say, getting the floor if you can (and every go-getter can), "I move we fine any member $10 who uses this detestable word or any of its synonyms." A deafening roar of approval will greet the motion, and it will be carried unanimously.

After the meeting you call on each member of the club separately. "I'm a little hard up," you say, "can you lend me $5 until Tuesday?" "Sorry, old man," each go-getter will begin, "but----." Then he will suddenly remember the fine. "Oh, sure I can," he will say.

After cleaning up from each member, you go to another town and do the thing all over again. Any good man ought to make two hundred a week until he's caught.

Woman—Why are you in mourning? Is your husband dead?

Neighbor—No, but he's behaved so badly that I have gone back into mourning for my first husband.

A local man gave up taking his morning exercise because it made him too tired to go to work.

In the court room to the man who can tell the same story the same way, as often as he is asked to repeat it, is attached the label of honesty.

Hal—I'm sure Dolly will make an ideal wife. Whenever I go to her home, I find her busily darning her father's socks.

Joe—That took me in, too, until I noticed it was always the same sock.

Visitor—But what about this crack in the wall?

Owner—Shut up, Fred. That's the breakfast nook.

To our mind the world's champion optimist is the old maid who powders her nose before she looks under her bed at night.

Jimmy, on being taken to see his brand new baby brother, for the first time, gazed long at him and then said: "My, but you're a lucky kid. You won't have to wash your own ears for years and years."

It doesn't follow that a young man has artistic ability simply because he is able to draw a check on his dad's bank account.

OTTO'S FAMILY CLAIMS BACKING OF BIG POWERS

The Hague, Holland (AP).—Otto of Hapsburg, 21-year-old heir of the royal house which used to rule the Austro-Hungarian empire, again has been projected into the European spotlight.

Emissaries of his widowed mother, the ex-Empress Zita, have been visiting various European capitals and family sources hint that their plans for an Austro-Hungarian-Croatian empire, with the youthful archduke on the throne as Otto I, are going forward.

Hapsburg intimates assert that four capitals would not consider such a development a misfortune. In this category they list Rome, Vatican City, Paris and London.

They hold further that four other countries, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Poland and Yugoslavia, would acquiesce provided that proper economic compensations are offered.

Expect German Protest

The same sources expect opposition from Germany because of the nazi hope of one day seeing Germans of Austria united with the reich. They also predict protests from Hungary where Admiral Nicholas Horthy rules a kingless monarchy as regent with Julius Goemboes as his premier. In this connection they cite recent visits by Goemboes to Berlin and Vienna.

The Hapsburg intimates point also to visits, recent or planned, of various royal personages to certain capitals. They connect to their cause a trip to Vienna by Alfonso XIII, ex-king of Spain, husband of a British princess and head of another Hapsburg branch. They cite further a recently announced call by Alfonso upon Dowager Queen Marie of Rumania.

Zita's Brother Active

In Belgrade, capital of Yugoslavia, Prince Sixtus of Parma, brother of Zita, has been visiting King Alexander. Reports have it that he has been trying to convince King Alexander that it would be to the latter's advantage to grant autonomy to Croatia, even though that province might vote to join Austria and Hungary with Otto as ruler.

Alexander, in turn, is reported to have sent his brother-in-law, Duke Anton of Hapsburg, an uncle of Otto, to Croatia. Duke Anton's father was popular among the Croats in pre-war days and now the son, say the reports, has been told to find out how their relations with their present king might be affected if they were granted home rule.

Italy's support is counted upon, the Hapsburg intimates say, because Otto, upon a restored throne, would be a match for 18-year-old Pincess Maria of Savoy, youngest daughter of the king of Italy. They claim that the Vatican would give its benediction to a union between the two royal Catholic families.

Princess Maria's sister is queen of Bulgaria. With another Italian queen in the Balkans, the argument runs, the policy of Mussolini regarding extension of influence in the Balkans would be strengthened.

An additional piece of Haphburg logic is that an Austro-Hungarian-Croatian empire with a Savoy queen would not be likely to open up the question of the South Tyrol, awarded to Italy after dismemberment of the old dual monarchy.

The Hapsburg adherents claim that the possibility of fresh arguments over that province in case of "anschluss" between Hitlerite Germany and a nazi Austria, is one of the impelling influences in Mussolini's cordiality toward the anti-nazi regime of Chancellor Engelbert Dollfuss in Vienna.

Early Success Predicted

The Hapsburgs are reported as ready to offer far-reaching economic advantages to the Polish, Czechoslovakian, Rumanian and Yugoslavian neighbors of the proposed new monarchy. They mention a customs union and say it would be of mutual advantage to the industrial and agricultural states within such a combination.

Some of Otto's supporters are so confident that all is going well that they predict it is only a question of weeks before he is proclaimed ruler.

Destined For Triple Crown?

Archduke Otto again has been named as the proposed ruler of a restored Hapsburg empire, this time one that would embrace Austria, Hungary and Croatia. The 20-year-old heir of royalty has recently acquired a noticeable mustache.

American Heroines

By LOUISE M. COMSTOCK

Deborah Sampson

IN THE days before the beach pajama and the shorts, the woman who donned masculine attire let herself in for serious consequences. Deborah Sampson, whose adventurous soul rebelled against the narrow background to which she was born, dressed herself up as a man and found herself fighting the American Revolution!

In 1778, when the Revolution was well under way and the army was sorely in need of recruits, Deborah was a vigorous girl of eighteen. She spun and wove a length of suiting, took it to a tailor and ordered him to make up a suit for a fictitious brother. Then, in her new clothes, Deborah set out on the highway of adventure.

On May 13, when a new detachment of fifty American soldiers arrived at West Point, there was among them a slender young infantryman named Robert Shurtleff, who carried his gun awkwardly and had fainted with weariness on the hard two weeks' march to the post.

Presently our heroine found herself in Captain Webb's company of light infantry, equipped with a French fusee, knapsack, cartridge box and thirty cartridges, handsome in a new uniform, blue coat lined with white, white waistcoat, breeches and stockings, and a jaunty red plumed hat. Side by side with her comrades at arms she fought at Tarrytown, White Plains and at Yorktown. Her greatest difficulties were the attention of infatuated women, and the danger of exposing her sex. She was once unceremoniously knocked down by a jealous sergeant who accused her of stealing his girl. She claimed to have had smallpox and risked contracting the disease rather than expose herself to vaccination, and she endured in silence the agony of a wound on her thigh, and bore its results the rest of her life, rather than submit to medical attention. At length, in Philadelphia during the summer of 1783, she fell victim to a fever, was thought dead, and her sex was discovered when the doctor felt for her heartbeat. The doctor kept his knowledge a secret.

Deborah was discharged from the army the following fall, married a young farmer named Benjamin Gannet, and bore him three children, who lived to share in the pension awarded her by the government in 1831.

Water Rodent

The coypu is a large water-loving rodent, somewhat bigger than a muskrat, males weighing, according to Mr. Patrik, 25 pounds and females about 15 pounds. It has a heavy body, rather blunt head with strong incisor teeth and small ears, short legs, the hind feet partly webbed, and a round, naked, ratlike tail; the fur in character and color much resembles beaver. This interesting and valuable little animal inhabits all parts of South America.

First Gas Cars

The modern automobile was a development of the gasoline internal combustion engine invented by Otto in 1876. Carl Benz, of Mannheim, Germany built the first gasoline-propelled vehicles in 1885 and 1886, but these were tricycles or motorcycles rather than automobiles; two years later Panhard and Levassor bought the French rights and built a gasoline-operated motor car. According to some authorities, in 1875 Siegfred Narkus, an Austrian, built a four-wheeled vehicle powered by an internal combustion engine.

To Get Rid of Crows

There are four related species of crows: The Florida crow, fish crow, southern, and western crow, but all of them can be cured of egg-eating tendencies by a simple remedy—strychnine. When Jim Crow needs some of this tonic, small holes should be made with an eight penny nail through the shells of a few eggs. A pea size quantity of strychnine is poured in and the openings closed with paraffin. The eggs are placed in elevated nests safe from desirable creatures, and when the nest robbers come back for more eggs it will be their last trip.—Missouri Farmer.
